- Settlers residing in the illegal West Bank outpost of Migron said that a deal ensuring that the outpost will not be razed has been reached. The settlers have reportedly agreed to have Migron relocated to a nearby hill, where it will rest on government-owned land. The Civil Administration will have to decide what to do with the structure left in Migron's current location, which is subjected to a land dispute with Palestinians. According to the settlement reached, the current structures would not be razed until the relocation of all the families is complete. The State has agreed to an 18-month timeline to that effect. Once the State and the settlers sign the deal, they will present it to the High Court for approval.
- The Jerusalem District Planning and Construction Committee approved the construction of a new visitors' center at the City of David National Park in Silwan. As part of this decision, Israel Nature and Parks Authority representatives this morning razed a complex built by Silwan residents that included a playground, community center and cafe. The new visitors' center is to be built above the Giv'ati parking lot and will be called the Mercaz Kedem (Kedem Center). The building will be built on stilts and beneath it there will be an area where visitors can view recently discovered archeological findings. The Elad organization promoted the plan and it obtained the support of Jerusalem Mayor Nir Barkat, who appeared before the district committee earlier today to voice his support.
