- 30 East Jerusalem streets given Hebrew names, enraging Arab residents. Defending decision, municipality says 800 roads given Arabic names; Arab MKs slam attempt to 'Judaicize al-Quds'. The Jerusalem municipality on Sunday night approved 30 Hebrew street names in predominantly Arab East Jerusalem neighborhoods, drawing fierce condemnation from both Arab residents and lawmakers. The new Hebrew street names, which were okayed as part of an ongoing project to map out the neighborhoods in the east of the city, were given to areas that house Jewish historical sites, according to the municipality. Over 800 streets in East Jerusalem have already been given Arabic names, city hall said. Around the City of David archaeological site in the Silwan neighborhood, seven streets were given Hebrew names, including “Ma’alot Ir David” and “Shir LaMa’alot,” according to the Walla news website. On the Mount of Olives, several streets were given Hebrew names reflecting Jewish ties to the site, and in Sheikh Jarrah, two streets will be called “Nahalat Shimon” and “Nahalat Yitzhak.” The committee decided against naming a street in Sheikh Jarrah “Kohen Gadol” (High Priest), agreeing that the reference to a prominent figure in the Jewish temples would spark riots in East Jerusalem neighborhoods, which have already seen heightened tensions and repeated clashes over the Temple Mount and perceived Israeli attempts to alter the status quo at the holy site. Israel maintains that it is not seeking to change the status quo at the compound known to Muslims as al-Aqsa, the third-holiest site in Islam and most holy in Judaism. Under the new directive, a street near Damascus Gate will be renamed “Amir Drori,” for the founder of the Israel Antiquities Authority, in a nod to the adjacent Rockefeller Museum, which houses the IAA’s offices. Former Supreme Court justice Jacob Turkel had advised against giving the streets Hebrew names in light of the security situation. He recommended the committee “reevaluate whether it is appropriate, at this point in time, and in light of the complicated and delicate situation in East Jerusalem,” to give the streets these names. The Jerusalem city hall committee rejected the recommendation. The decision was met with strong opposition from East Jerusalem residents, who said it would “cause more violence.” “This is all part of one plan — first, to Judaize al-Aqsa, second, the Arab villages, third, the history and names,” Silwan resident Ahmad Karaeen Abu Hamid told Walla. Joint (Arab) List party leader Ayman Odeh decried the decision as a “vile attempt” to erase residents’ Palestinian identity. “We have recently been witness to aggressive attempts to change the status quo in East Jerusalem and deepen the occupation and dispossession. The choice of street names, with a total disregard for who built and lives on these streets for thousands of years, is a vile attempt to eradicate the national Palestinian identity,” he said. Referring to recent riots in Jerusalem, Joint (Arab) List MK Ahmad Tibi said “someone decided to add fuel to the fire of tensions in Jerusalem, and this is a pyromaniac decision.” The city’s actions are part of “ongoing efforts to Judaize al-Quds” — the Arabic name for Jerusalem — “and falsify history,” he added. The Jerusalem municipality defended the decision. “More than 800 names that were approved in East Jerusalem were selected by the Arabs themselves, giving broad expression to their historical and religious legacy,” it said in a statement. “For sites that have a weighty Jewish historical legacy, the street names reflect this legacy.” In February, an adviser to Mayor Nir Barkat said the Jerusalem municipality had nearly completed the mapping and naming of streets in East Jerusalem, in what he said was endeavor that would both boost the residents’ sense of belonging and allow city hall to more effectively collect taxes. The naming mechanism allowed local residents to propose street names, which were then vetted by Islam expert Professor Yitzhak Reiter “to preclude terrorists,” the adviser said. Finally, they were approved by a municipal naming committee headed by former Supreme Court justice Turkel. (Time of Israel 22 September 2015)

- Palestinians Excluded From Israel Police Map of Southern West Bank. According to the map, which hangs in the Kiryat Arba-Hebron police station, the population of the region is 81,000, 99.6 percent of whom are Jewish. The map of the Hebron region used by the Israel Police excludes all the Palestinian villages and communities in the area, other than the three big cities, and omits written data about the Palestinian population. In the map's segmentation of the terrain between "built-up" and "open" areas, the populated Palestinian areas are included under "open". The map was published in 2014 by the police's planning division and bears the signature of division head Maj. Gen. Danny Chen. The Hebron sector in the Judea and Samaria police district covers the southern West Bank (up to and including Bethlehem) but not the Judean Desert. The map, a photograph of which was obtained by Haaretz, is framed and hangs on the wall in the patrol room of the Kiryat Arba-Hebron police station. It consists of a large information board, in the center of which is the map. Only the cities of Bethlehem, Halhul and Hebron appear on the map, alongside Israeli settlements (but excluding unauthorized outposts). The other Palestinian cities, towns, villages, shepherding communities – together numbering more than 200 localities – don't appear. Areas A, B and C as defined by the Oslo Accords are color coded. The police don't operate in Area A, but are authorized to operate in areas B and C, in other words to enter the dozens of villages and communities in those areas. They are also authorized to detain, arrest and issue traffic tickets to any Palestinian travelling the roads in Area C. The information section of the map puts the "number of residents" at 82,000. An asterisk points to a note that reads "Irrespective of the Palestinian population." The religious segmentation of the area is given as 99.6 percent Jews and 0.4 percent others. The list also includes population growth information (6 percent), number of settlements (28, seven urban and the rest rural) and the breakdown of the population (82.9 percent urban and the rest rural). The police's Hebron sector roughly coincides with two Palestinian governorates: Hebron and Bethlehem, with a combined area of 1,680 km². The "area of the station" (i.e. the area covered by the sector without division into A, B and C) is – according to the map – 1473 km², of which 0.7 percent is built-up and 99.3 percent is "open" – i.e. the opposite of built-up. In practice, however, the built-up area in the Hebron and Bethlehem governorates is 6.5 percent or 104 km² (as of 2011,) according to the Bethlehem-based Jerusalem Institute for Applied Research. It's worth noting that the website of the police's Judea and Samaria district gives different figures: 1,600 km² for the Hebron sector, as opposed to 1,473 km² on the map in the police station, 32 settlements (28 on the map) and 62,000 residents. The website also notes that 811,000 Palestinians live in the sector in 99 communities. The Israel Police responded: "We stress forcefully that the Israel Police operates professionally and equally with no connection to the identity of the citizens. Maps are a tool that provides visual representation for the officers and policemen and in no way encompasses a position, type of action or attitude to the population for which the force in the sector is responsible." "When the Israel Police compiles a demographic profile, it is based entirely on public data from the Central Bureau of Statistics, which does not publish population estimates about the Palestinian communities and is not authorized to provide population estimates that are not based on its data. "It goes without saying that the comment relating to the Palestinian population refers only to the way that demographic data is calculated and nothing else. All the localities in the sector, without reference to their identities, appear in the police's computerized mapping system, as well as the map itself". (Haaretz 27 September 2015)

- Israeli forces close 3rd Hebron radio station this month. Israeli forces issued an order for the closure of a Hebron radio station on Sunday morning, the third news outlet to be shut by Israel this month in the occupied West Bank city. Director of Dream Radio station, Talab Al-Jaabri, told Ma'an that Israeli forces stormed the station, destroying equipment and damaging offices. Al-Jaabri said Israeli forces told him the radio station would be closed for six months due to "incitement against Israel." Following the closure, Al-Jaabri called on the Palestinian Authority to take action against "the violations." An Israeli army spokesperson did not immediately respond for comment. Last week Israeli forces shut down Al-Khalil Radio (Hebron Radio), also in Hebron, on the same grounds of incitement. The Palestinian government, at the time, denounced the Israeli military raid on the station, describing it as violation of international law. Secretary-general of the Palestinian cabinet, Ali Abu Diak, had said in a statement that the attack was part of Israel's policy to "oppress the voice of Palestinian rights" and to prevent publication of the truth about "the ongoing ugly crimes Israel is committing against the Palestinian people. "The closures of the two stations marks the latest violation of press freedoms in the occupied Palestinian Territory. Earlier this month, Israeli forces ordered the closure and ban on broadcasting from Manbar al-Hurriyya (Freedom Tribune) radio station, also located in Hebron and reportedly affiliated with Fatah. The Israeli army accused the radio station of encouraging "stabbing attacks" and "violent riots," and reporting "false and malicious claims of security forces executing and kidnapping Palestinians in order to provoke violence." The incident came a day after a Palestinian press freedoms watchdog condemned more than 450 violations of media freedoms since the beginning of the year. The watchdog, MADA, has repeatedly reported violations against the press -- both international and Palestinian -- while reporting from the occupied Palestinian territories. Such violations are carried out by both Israeli and Palestinian security forces, according to MADA documentation. MADA said that while press violations had not reached last year's proportions, when 17 Palestinian journalists were killed by Israeli forces in Gaza, violations in 2015 had "witnessed an enormous escalation." Previously, informed and incredible sources told Days of Palestine that the Israeli army had already started working on the groove. "They imported 150 new bulldozers and started working in a deep and long groove around the Gaza Strip, from the north and the east," the source said. He added: "The Israeli groove to be connected to the Egyptian, which already exists and is filled with seawater, from time to time." According to the source, who preferred to remain unknown, the Israeli occupation is also to fill their groove with water, in order to damage the tunnels dug by the Palestinians from Gaza to Israel. After the Israeli occupation establishes the groove, the Gaza Strip would technically become an island, as it will be encircled with water from all sides. (IMEMC 12 November 2015)

- Yaalon Won't Raze Etzion Bloc Memorial Reserve. Contrary to earlier fears, Minister of Defense wants to legalize Oz Vegaon, not tear it down. Contrary to earlier fears and reports, Minister of Defense Moshe Yaalon wants to legalize the Oz Vegaon memorial nature park at Gush Etzion, not tear it down. The Head of the Etzion Bloc Regional Council, Davidi Perl, expressed his gratitude Wednesday for the decision by Yaalon to speed up bureaucratic approval of the park near the Etzion Junction, and prevent it from being destroyed. "The minister of defense has once again proven that he is a friend of the settlement enterprise," Perl added. He said that the incident proved that working quietly and directly vis-a-vis the Defense Ministry is the best way to achieve results in Judea and Samaria. "Together with the security establishment, we will continue to take action toward the quick and quiet legalization of all of Judea and Samaria," he predicted. MK Oren Hazan (Likud) assisted in preventing the move to tear down the park. (Israel National News 2 September 2015)
- Netanyahu: Israel to weigh changing open-fire orders on those throwing rocks and fire-bombs. PM says that he is not willing to tolerate rock and petrol-bomb attacks on a central road to Jerusalem, or inside the capital. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu convened a special high-level security meeting on Wednesday where it was decided to increase security forces in Jerusalem and on Road 443 from the capital to Mod'in, and weigh new open-fire orders on those throwing rocks and fire-bombs. The meeting, which included Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon, Public Security Minister Gilad Erdan, Transportation and Intelligence Minister Yisrael Katz, General Security Services (Shin Bet) head Yoram Cohen, and other security officials was called in light of a recent spike in terror incidents in the capital and on 443, which is one of the major roads to and from the capital. According to a statement put out by the Prime Minister's Office, Netanyahu said that he was not willing to tolerate rock and petrol-bomb attacks on a central road to Jerusalem, or inside the capital. "The policy is zero tolerance for rock throwers and zero tolerance for terror," he said, legislating a minimum punishment for those offenders, "since the legal system is having difficulty dealing with juveniles" engaged in those activities. It was agreed at the meeting that the number of security forces along 443 and in Judea and Samaria will be increased, and that observation posts and intelligence gathering means will be enhanced. Likewise, two additional border patrol squadrons will be sent to the capital, as well as another 400 police. This is the second consultation on the worsening security situation that Netanyahu has held this week, saying at the end that the number of violent incidents needed to be drastically reduced. - Israeli Government Erases $76m in Debts Owed by Settlements. State writes off the majority of debts owed by dozens of Jewish settlements, but released figures this week only after Haaretz filed suit to obtain the information. The Israeli government has erased 65 percent of the debts of 36 Jewish communities in the West Bank and Golan Heights that are owed to the World Zionist Organization's settlement division, forgoing 300 million shekels ($76.5 million) of the 360 million shekels these communities owe. Dozens of other settlements still owe money on loans granted as far back as 1978. The debts stem from loans provided by the WZO with government funds granted to settlements in the West Bank and Golan Heights, used for agriculture and development of the communities. The settlement division has done almost nothing to collect these debts, with only about 15 percent of the total paid back over the years. The management of the debts was faulty and part of the loans were listed for years in Israeli pounds (which were replaced by shekels in 1980, and subsequently replaced by the new shekels in 1985). Most of the loans were taken out by "cooperative societies" representing the communities, and some by the farmers themselves. In the government's annual financial report of 2010, the Finance Ministry noted that the debt collection over the years for the loans provided through the settlement division was minimal, or nonexistent. The treasury also pointed out that construction loans had not been listed in previous years, that no terms for their repayment had been set, nor any method of accounting and management of these loans determined. As a result of this report, the settlement division, in cooperation with the Finance Ministry, started a debt repayment campaign in May, 2011 to pay off the loans granted through the end of 2003. Regulations were published outlining how to write off such debts, and under which conditions debtors could turn to a joint committee of the Finance Ministry and settlement division to request that their debts be erased. In recent years, the state has listed these debts as having fallen from 588 million shekels in 2010 to 35 million shekels. In January 2015, Haaretz filed a request under the Freedom of Information Law to receive information on these debt settlements, including the amounts written off. The Finance Ministry refused to provide the data. Haaretz then filed suit in the Jerusalem District Court to receive the information. This week, a few days before the scheduled hearing on the petition, the state provided the requested figures "beyond the letter of the law," it said. The documents reveal that at the end of 2013 there were over 100 cooperative societies with debts to the WZO's settlement division, totaling 360 million shekels. The government estimates that only 60 million shekels of this amount can be collected. Among the major settlements with the largest debts are: Kedumim (24 million shekels), Shvut Rahel (18 million), Halamish (17 million), Beit El (16 million), Kfar Adumim – where Agriculture Minister Uri Ariel (Habayit Hayehudi), who is responsible for the settlement division lives (14 million), Ofra (14 million) and Kfar Tapuah (13 million). In the Golan Heights, 36 communities reached debt settlements with the government. The original debts were 158 million shekels, but only 22 million shekels of this amount was paid back as part of the arrangements. After the debt agreements, the total owed by these communities was 49 million shekels – meaning a 64 percent write off. Sansana in the southern Hebron hills received a 93 percent debt relief, the largest granted. The community had borrowed 622,000 shekels and had not paid off a single shekel of this debt. In the end, the debt arrangement left Sansana with 44,000 shekels in loans to repay. Shani-Livne, which straddles the Green Line south of Hebron, borrowed 3.1 million shekels, and after reaching a debt arrangement will have to pay back only 988,000 shekels. But the settlement division was quite generous to the community and will allow it to pay back this sum in 180 monthly payments – in other words through 2029. Neot Golan borrowed 4.7 million shekels and never repaid any part of it. After the debt agreement the community paid 572,000 shekels — only 12 percent of the original amount owed. In comparison, Kfar Haruv on the Golan Heights borrowed 9.2 million shekels and paid back 5.3 million shekels over the years. It later repaid another 1.6 million shekels - for a total repayment of 74 percent of its debts. In the Jordan Valley the cooperative societies owed a total of 146 million shekels. But since only partial figures were provided concerning those communities, and it is difficult to estimate the amount of debt written off. The settlement division reached debt settlements with 372 debtors who owed a total of 17 million shekels. The average private debtor had 50 percent of their loans written off. - Settlers to hold rally near Palestinian village of Nabi Saleh in support of IDF soldiers. The group will gather at the entrance to the Neveh Tzuf settlement, otherwise known as Halamish, which is located just across the road from Nabi Saleh. Right-wing activists and settlers plan to stage a protest on Friday on the outskirts of the Nabi Saleh village, 20 km. northwest of Ramallah, to counter the weekly Palestinian demonstrations held there. Led by Beit Aryeh Council head Avi Naim, the group will gather at the entrance to the Neveh Tzuf settlement, otherwise known as Halamish, which is located just across the road from Nabi Saleh. Naim said he was inspired to hold the rally in support of soldiers after he saw a video that went viral from last Friday's demonstration in which women and children from Nabi Saleh attack a soldier as he tried to arrest 11-year-old Muhammad Tamimi, whose left arm was visibly in a cast. The video shows a partially masked soldier with one hand on a rifle and another on the neck of a terrified-looking boy. Palestinians from Nabi Saleh have held weekly demonstrations against Israel's presence in the West Bank as well as what they term settler "land expropriation" since 2009. Most of the demonstrations end with Palestinians throwing stones at soldiers and soldiers firing tear gas to disperse the crowd. The time has come to stop these Palestinian demonstrations, not just in Nabi Saleh but elsewhere in Judea and Samaria, Naim said, adding that the IDF should use collective punishment against villages that hold these violent rallies. Soldiers are pitted against the protesters without adequate support, he said, particularly given that protesters often create negative videos of them that are then posted on the Web, such as occurred on Friday. On Wednesday, Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas hailed Tamimi and the rest of his family heroes. Last Friday, at his office in his Ramallah headquarters, known as the Mukata, Abbas received Tamimi and his family, including his sister Ahed, 14, and mother, Nariman, who was seen racing to his aid in the video and helping to beat the soldier. He thanked them for their courage in “fighting for their land” and in “confronting the tyranny of the occupation.” Such “popular peaceful resistance” is a powerful weapon in the hands of the Palestinian people, Abbas said. (JPOST 4 September 2015)

- Israel Begins Construction of Fence Along Jordan Border. As refugees pour into Europe, Netanyahu cautions over 'countries losing control of their borders'; new fence will cost an estimated $75 million. Work on the fence along the Israeli-Jordanian border began on Sunday – about a month earlier than planned – and will continue for about a year. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said Sunday: "We see today what happens when countries lose control of their borders." He seemed to be referring to the massive influx of refugees from the war-torn Middle East and African migrants heading to Europe. The Defense Ministry moved up the start date of some of its contracts, apparently fearing potential infiltration by global jihad activists from Jordan. Defense officials have noted that the construction of the new airport at Timna required special preparations, since its perimeter will be only 200 meters from the border. The cost of the 30-kilometer fence that will be built at this stage is estimated at 300 million shekels ($76.4 million); building a fence all along the Israeli-Jordanian border would cost some 3 billion shekels. After the construction of the fence was approved by the cabinet in June, the state took pains to announce that the fence “would not undermine the sovereignty of Jordan’s Hashemite kingdom”. The speed with which the military formulated the plan and with which the government approved it indicates that Israel is eager to completely surround its land borders with physical barriers. The Jordanian border was Israel’s only land border not reinforced by a fence. Earlier on Sunday, Netanyahu bemoaned the "human tragedy" of Syria's civil war and said Israel has aided its victims. However, he said Israel is too small to take them. Opposition leader Isaac Herzog said Saturday that Israel should take in a limited number of Syrian refugees. (Haaretz 6 September 2015)
- Record Number of Palestinian Structures Slated for Demolition in West Bank. The demolition orders have been issued against homes, cisterns and shacks in the area under full Israeli control. More than 11,000 demolition orders are pending against at least 13,000 Palestinian structures in the part of the West Bank known as Area C, which is under full Israeli control, according to data from Israel’s Civil Administration in the West Bank. The data show that in 1988-1995, only 49 demolition orders a year, on average, were issued in the 60 percent of the West Bank designated as Area C under the 1993 Oslo Accord. The average shot up to 304 in 1996-2001, then rose to 511 in 2002-2009; throughout these 13 years, there was a slow but steady rise from year to year. But in 2010-2014, the average almost doubled, to 966 per year. Demolition orders are issued against many different types of structures, from homes and public buildings solidly built of concrete blocks through tents and tin shacks to sheepfolds, portable toilets, electricity pylons, solar panels and cisterns for collecting rainwater. What they all have in common is that they were built without permits from the Civil Administration. The UN Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs analyzed the Civil Administration data, which was obtained thanks to a freedom-of-information request filed by Bimkom – Planners for Planning Rights and independent researcher Dror Etke. OCHA's report will be published today. The data show that from 1988 through the end of 2014, Israel issued 14,087 demolition orders against Palestinian structures. Of these, 2,802, or 19.9 percent, were carried out. During those same years, the Civil Administration issued 6,984 demolition orders against structures erected by Jewish settlers. Of those, only 854, or 12 percent, were implemented. Some 300,000 Palestinians and about 356,000 settlers live in Area C. But OCHA's report stresses that a strictly numerical comparison is unfair, because the two populations start from radically different positions. The Civil Administration has thus far approved master plans for Jewish settlements covering 282,174 dunams, or 8.5 percent of Area C. The unplanned area encompassed by the settlements' municipal boundaries is much larger. In contrast, approved master plans for Palestinian communities cover only 18,243 dunams – less than one percent of Area C. Moreover, the report says, Palestinians filed 2,030 requests for building permits in 2010-14, yet of these, only 33 – 1.5 percent – were approved. In contrast, Israel issued tenders for building 2,359 housing units in the settlements in 2014 alone. OCHA began documenting the demolition of Palestinian structures in the mid-2000s. In 2009, it documented 190 demolitions, jumping to 351 in 2010 and a peak of 577 in 2011. In 2012, 2013 and 2014, the numbers were 524, 564 and 496, respectively. But this year is on track to set a new record, with 384 demolitions in the first six months alone. The report also quotes Israel's rationale for the demolitions: They are a legitimate enforcement measure under Jordanian law – the law in force when Israel captured the West Bank in 1967, which the Hague Conventions require an occupying power to respect – as well as under military orders issued since 1967 and the 1995 interim agreement with the Palestinians, which said that planning in Area C must be approved by Israeli planning agencies. In response to the report the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories issued the following response: "The numbers that appear in the report do not correspond to what is happening on the ground, since, among other reasons, the report includes data from East Jerusalem, which isn't under our jurisdiction. In accordance with the interim agreements Israel and the Palestinian Authority signed, agreements that are recognized by the international community, all construction in Area C requires the authorization of the responsible authorities. It should be noted that the Civil Administration is currently working on 13 outline plans, as per the requests on the Palestinian population, plans which are in advance planning stages, of which four have already passed the planning stage". Contrary to what is stated in the response OCHA's report does include buildings in Palestinian Authority's Jerusalem District, but doesn't include those in East Jerusalem. - Israel Bans Two Muslim Activist Groups From Al-Aqsa Mosque. Informal Mourabitoun and Mourabitat groups, composed mostly of Arab women and elderly men, demonstrate when Jews visit the Jerusalem holy site. Israeli Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon outlawed on Tuesday two Islamic Movement organizations operating on Jerusalem's Al-Aqsa Mosque, known to Muslims as Haram al-Sharif. According to his office, the declaration of the two organizations, called Morabiton and Morabitat, as unlawful received approval from the attorney general. Consequently, anyone participating in the organizations' activities, organizing them or funding them is subject to punishment by law. The declaration is backed by force of the Mandatory Defense (Emergency) Regulations. According to the minister's office, the Shin Bet security service and police recommended outlawing the groups after Ya'alon was convinced that "the matter was necessary to protect state security, peace and public order. "The activity of the Morabiton and Morabitat groups constitutes a central figure in creating tension and violence on Al-Aqsa Mosque in particular and Jerusalem in general," Ya'alon's office announced. "The activity is inflammatory and endangers tourists, visitors and worshippers at the site, leading to violence that could harm human life. The goal of Morabiton and Morabitat is to undermine Israeli authority on Al-Aqsa Mosque, alter reality and existing arrangements and restrict freedom of worship, and it is tied to the activity of hostile Islamist organizations and even directed by them." The northern branch of the Islamic Movement in Israel founded the two organizations – Morabiton for men and Morabitat for women – to harass Jews visiting Al-Aqsa Mosque. The organizations operate a daily shuttle service from the Triangle (a concentration of Arab villages including Umm al-Fahm and Taibeh), the Galilee and the Negev to the Al-Aqsa Mosque. A few dozen men and women usually arrive on a given day, joined by some East Jerusalem residents. The participants spend most of the day praying or listening to lectures, but when Jews enter Al-Aqsa Mosque, they draw close, shouting and cursing at them. This behavior has led to occasional violence. Public Security Minister Gilad Erdan asked Ya'alon late last month to outlaw the groups. "These organizations stalk Jewish visitors to Al-Aqsa Mosque, yelling impassioned and inciting things and blocking the visitors' way on the Mount," said Erdan. "Their goal is to narrow the steps of Jews seeking to visit the Al-Aqsa Mosque through violence and intimidation, and I will do anything within my ability to stop the activities of these dangerous organizations that upset the balance on the Al-Aqsa Mosque." The police a few days later began preventing almost all Muslim women from entering the Al-Aqsa Mosque complex before 11 A.M. They were permitted to enter after this hour, on condition that they leave their ID cards as a deposit. The directive came about because of the increase in run-ins and violence against Jewish visitors on Al-Aqsa Mosque by Morabitat members. The Shin Bet and the police had closed in January the offices of organizations set up by the northern branch of the Islamic Movement, which were dedicated to funding Morabiton and Morabitat. The organizations are "dedicated to hurting Israeli sovereignty at the site by violating the security of Al-Aqsa Mosque visitors, raising tensions and disturbing the peace," according to the Shin Bet. Security officials say the NGOs that were closed recruited paid activists for both groups so they would visit Al-Aqsa Mosque every day at set times. Activists earned 3,000-4,000 shekels ($771-$1,028) per month, according to the officials. They added some of the funds were sent from the Gulf States, sometimes via couriers, to the West Bank, and from there were transferred to East Jerusalem. "When a group of visitors would arrive at Al-Aqsa Mosque, the activists tended to use verbal violence as well as physical violence against them, violating their freedom of religion in a way that threatens their personal security," asserted a Shin Bet official. "The activity of these institutions caused agitation and incitement at the site, exploiting the holy site for Islam and Judaism." (Haaretz 10 September 2015)

- Settler housing finishes up by 54.8% from last year. Central Bureau of Statistics releases quarterly report on settler homes in West Bank. The number of homes built in the West Bank increased 54.8% in the first half of this year, compared with the first six months of last year, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported on Wednesday. Similarly, there was a 49.6% jump in the number of housing starts in the same period, the CBS said. Its quarterly release of data comes as Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu headed to London to speak with his British counterpart, David Cameron, about the Quartet's new push to revive the peace process, which has been frozen since April 2014. Palestinians insist that they will not hold talks with Israel until it halts all building in West Bank settlements and east Jerusalem. Israel contends that such construction has no impact on a final status agreement for a two-state solution. In the first two quarters of 2014, ground was broken on 657 new West Bank homes, and an additional 657 units were completed. In terms of real numbers, the 983 construction starts in the West Bank make up only 3.9% of the 25,099 new housing units nationwide in the first half of 2015. Similarly, the 1,017 finished homes from January to June of this year equal only 4.7 of the overall 21,470 housing units completed the first half of this year. Still, the growth rate for new construction in the West Bank significantly outpaces that of new building nationwide, which registered a 7.9% increase in housing starts and a 6.9% rise in finishes in the first half of this year, compared to the same time period last year. Only the southern part of the country, which registered a 78.1 percent leap in new housing starts, outpaced building in Judea and Samaria. Yigal Dilmoni, the deputy head of the Council of Jewish Communities of Judea and Samaria, says that he welcomes all news of construction growth, but that this is still not enough to provide adequate housing for the nearly 15,000 new people who move into communities there annually. The new building in these areas was authorized as part of the agreement Israel made with the PA to release “murderous terrorists” in exchange for settlement growth, Dilmoni said. “We must be able to build in Judea and Samaria without freeing prisoners,” he adds. For the past year, residents in Judea and Samaria have persistently complained about a freeze in construction, noting that, while there is growth in some communities, many others are frozen. Peace Now executive head Yariv Oppenheimer says that the CBS data shows that “all complaining about a settlement freeze is an illusion and a spin. On the ground, things are being built all the time.” Such building, he says, destroys the possibility of a two state resolution to the Israeli- Palestinian conflict. “So this will be another year in which we are moving forward to a bi-national state,” Oppenheimer says. - High Court to State: Explain Plan to Raze West Bank Bedouin Village. Khirbet Zanuta existed before Israel was founded, yet has no building permits. Residents of Khirbet Zanuta, south of Hebron in the West Bank, received a reason for hope last week that they won't be uprooted from the village they and their families have lived in for decades. Responding to a petition by the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, which represents the village residents, the High Court of Justice issued a restraining order in which it ordered the state to explain within 90 days its intention to demolish the village buildings before finding a reasonable solution for the villagers. The High Court's position deserves attention, given the rise in the number of demolitions the Civil Administration has carried out in recent weeks in Palestinian communities without providing residents with alternative living quarters. The High Court ruling came after nearly a year of discussions between the sides that went nowhere. The Civil Administration issued 15 demolition orders for village structures in 2007, arguing they were built without permits. Israel refuses to prepare master plans for villages like Zanuta, which existed before Israel conquered the West Bank in 1967 and even before Israel's founding in 1948 – so there is no legal way to ask for a building permit. The 27 families living in Zanuta make a living from shepherding and engage in subsistence farming. They lived in natural caves until the 1980s, adding stone entrances. The caves began to collapse, and the residents were forced to build tin shacks and tents next to them. Demolition orders were issued against these structures. ACRI petitioned the High Court in 2007, seeking a restraining order and ordering the state to prepare a master plan for the village, which is not connected to the national electricity grid or water system. A restraining order prevented the demolitions. The case went cold for three years until settler organization Regavim sought to join the process. Then the state filed its response to the petition. In addition to its basic position that the place is a random collection of illegal structures, the state argued that the residents should leave because they were living in an archaeological site (including an ancient mosque). The Civil Administration is developing the Meitarim industrial zone a few hundred meters from the village. The court ordered the sides to begin a dialogue. ACRI and Bimkom, a planning rights organization, proposed preparing a master plan for the village in its present location. An opinion paper by archaeologist Avi Ofer and architect Giora Solar, who specializes in conservation and belongs to the Israeli Institute of Archaeology, stated that like in other communities, Zanuta could exist in an archaeological site while conserving it. Civil Administration representatives stuck to their position that the residents must relocate to Dahariyya, in Area A (under full Palestinian control), and bear the cost of planning their new residences. ACRI filed its request for a restraining order on August 30, arguing the state had not answered residents' fears of relocation. An examination by Bimkom discovered that the area the state was suggesting was not topographically suitable. Even more serious, Dahariyya urban residents opposed this new neighborhood. Likewise, the new location offered next to the Tene Omarim settlement and the Har Mor farm is a recipe for altercations and blocking residents' access to grazing areas, based on past experience. Justices Hanan Melcer, Uzi Fogelman and Noam Sohlberg issued the restraining order. Attorney Sharona Eliahu-Chai of ACRI said the High Court decision confirms that the state did not answer substantial questions such as why it didn't prepare a master plan for the present village, and why it insisted on relocating the village to a place that does not meet the residents' basic needs. (Haaretz 11 September 2015)

- Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu announced a toughening of the penalties for stone-throwers following a third day of clashes in and around the Al-Aqsa Mosque compound in East Jerusalem. Despite international calls for calm, Israeli forces stormed the site for the third straight day on Tuesday, leading to fierce clashes with Palestinian protesters. Netanyahu made the announcement at the start of an emergency meeting of ministers and security officials that was called after the death of an Israeli driver who lost control of his car on Sunday. Israeli police have claim that they suspect he lost control after a stone was thrown at his car, although they have released no evidence and the Jerusalem Magistrate's Court has issued a gag order on the details of the incident. "It has been decided to toughen the measures in many areas; a modification of the rules of engagement will be examined as well as the establishment of a minimum penalty for those who throw stones," the prime minister said. He added that there would be "significant fines" for minors who commit such offences, as well as for their parents. "On the day before (Jewish) new year, it has been proved once again that stones can kill," said Netanyahu, alluding to the death of the Israeli driver. In July, the Knesset passed a law making penalties for stone-throwing more severe. The new law allowed for stone-throwers to receive a 20-year prison sentence where intent to harm could be proven, and 10 years where it could not. At the time the bill was passed, Palestinian MK Jamal Zahalka said: "Who will the judge send to prison? He who demolished the home, seized the land, killed the brother, or the boy who threw a stone?" Israel detains hundreds of Palestinians for alleged stone-throwing every year, and Israeli rights group B'Tselem reported that from 2005 to 2010, "93 percent of the minors convicted of stone throwing were given a prison sentence, its length ranging from a few days to 20 months." Palestinians fear Israel is seeking to change rules governing the Al-Aqsa Mosque compound, which is the third holiest site in Islam, with far-right Jewish groups pushing for more access to the compound and even efforts by fringe organizations to erect a new temple. Jews are allowed to visit the compound at certain times, but are forbidden from praying there, under an agreement between Israel and the Islamic Endowment that administers the site. However, in recent weeks, and over the Jewish new year holiday, Israeli forces have restricted Palestinian access to the site while escorting large numbers of Jewish worshipers through it. These actions have reinforced fears among Palestinians that Israel wants to scrap the current arrangements and impose a division of the use of the compound, with Jews in the morning and Palestinian Muslims for the rest of the day. Netanyahu during the overnight meeting insisted that the status quo at the mosque would be maintained, under which Muslims can visit the site when they wish. However, he said that he would not let "trouble-makers" upset visits by Jews to the site. (Maannews 16 September 2015)

- Palestinian hunger-striker Allan released from hospital and rearrested. A Palestinian prisoner went on a hunger strike to protest his administrative detention, and was released due to his deteriorating medical condition. Muhammad Allan, a Palestinian hunger-striker who was released from administrative detention last month after refusing food for over 60 days, was rearrested Wednesday after having been discharged from Barzilai Medical Center in Ashkelon. The High Court of Justice ordered the release of Allan from his administrative detention in late August due to his deteriorating medical condition, including the revelation that his brain had been damaged. However, his medical condition had forced him to remain in the hospital. On Wednesday, after he finally was discharged from Barzilai, he was rearrested on administrative detention. Police did not immediately give an explanation for the move. (IPOST 16 September 2015)
- Israel approves new homes in Jerusalem settlement amid violence. Israel has given a final approval for the construction of 153 housing units in a Jewish settlement neighborhood in Jerusalem, officials said on Wednesday. The approval was made as tension is running high in Jerusalem, amid four-day clashes between Israeli police and Palestinians over the Jews' rights to visit the flashpoint al-Aqsa mosque compound. Sapir Peles, a spokeswoman with the Jerusalem Municipality, told Xinhua that the housing units are planned to be constructed as part of a new country club in the settlement neighborhood of Ramot, northeast of Jerusalem. She added that the city's Local Committee for Planning and Building has decided to issue the permits after a preliminary plan was approved in 2009. The committee also revised building permits for additional housing units in Ramot, which were originally approved last year, allowing the contractor to add porches to 243 units. Hagit Ofran, a researcher with the Israeli settlement watchdog Peace Now, told Xinhua that the permits means the construction could begin within a few days. "Expanding settlements is fanning the flames at a volatile time in the Temple Mount," she said, referring to the Israeli term for Haram al-Sharif, where the al-Aqsa mosque is located. Dozens of Palestinians and Israeli officers were injured over the past week, as police raided the Temple Mount/Haram al-Sharif compound in order to allow Jewish visitors to the holy site. Jews revered the place as the site of their biblical temple. Palestinians consider such visits as a provocation. Israel occupied the West Bank, including East Jerusalem, during the 1967 Mideast War and has been controlling it ever since. The Jewish settlements are constructed on lands considered by the Palestinians as their future state. International law deems the settlement as illegal. (Sama News 17 September 2015)

- Netanyahu Asks Attorney General to Authorize Sniper Fire Against Stone-throwers. At emergency meeting on tensions in Jerusalem, it emerged that there is a difference in open-fire regulations for police and Israel's army. AG asked to okay police following same guidelines as military. There is a significant difference in the open fire regulations followed by Israel Police and by the Israeli army. This is what emerged in Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu emergency meeting with senior members of Israel's defense establishment on Tuesday about the increasing tensions and violence in Jerusalem. While the Israel Defense Forces permits troops in the West Bank to operate snipers and use small caliber 0.22 inch Ruger rifles fitted with a sniper scope, the police is not allowed to do this. When it comes to the IDF, sniper and Ruger fire are allowed when firebombs or large stones are being thrown and commanders in the field are certain that lives are in danger. Shots are mostly fired at perpetrators' legs. In Jerusalem police units, meanwhile, such measures are not allowed. Open fire regulations only permit using crowd dispersal measures, such as firing rubber bullets and throwing tear gas grenades. Ahead of an additional meeting on the security situation set for Monday, Israel's Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein has been asked to give an opinion on whether to allow the police to follow the same open fire regulations as the army does in the West Bank. Ruger rifles were used in the West Bank during the Second Intifada. They were prohibited for a few years after a number of Palestinian youths were killed by Ruger fire. Today, their use is once again permitted. Attendees at Netanyahu's emergency meeting Tuesday said that allowing police to follow these guidelines would only require an internal police adjustment, and not a change in legislation. If, that is, Weinstein okays it. The IDF says that the permissive West Bank regulations are necessary because of a great number of incidents where Israeli lives are in danger because of firebombs and thrown stones. So far, Netanyahu, Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon and Public Security Minister Gilad Erdan support police following the same guidelines as part of their fight against Palestinian stone throwers in Jerusalem. Netanyahu, who visited the Armon Hanatziv neighborhood in Jerusalem Wednesday - the site of the deadly car crash that took place on Sunday after stones were thrown at the vehicle - said that the government would take an even harder line on stone throwers. The policy will change, "not just in Jerusalem and the main routes to [the city]. But also in the Galilee and in the Negev," he said. (Haaretz 17 September 2015)

- Israel plans to bring in 20,000 Chinese construction workers. Move to import labor meant to target the increasing cost of living in Israel by increasing building efficiency. Israel plans to bring in 20,000 Chinese construction workers to help build new apartments as part of efforts to lower housing costs, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said today. Netanyahu announced the plan at the start of a cabinet meeting, his office said. The Finance Ministry later said the cabinet had approved it. Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein has opposed the move because the two countries lack a formal agreement related to such cooperation. The lack of an agreement can lead to immigrant workers paying middlemen hundreds or even thousands of dollars to obtain permits. Chinese workers are currently brought into Israel under private contracts between Israeli and Chinese companies. The two countries have engaged in negotiations on working conditions, but have not yet reached an accord. A statement from the Finance Ministry said that due to the urgency of the matter, the workers would be brought without a bilateral agreement, while creating mechanisms to ensure their rights were protected and prevent them from paying middlemen for permits. Netanyahu said that it was important to move forward despite "side costs," with the cost of living a major issue in Israel. "In my view, this is a necessary and important step to lower housing prices," Netanyahu said. Israel's construction sector currently employs 216,000 workers, including 37,000 Palestinians and 6,000 foreigners, with some 3,700 Chinese. The Finance Ministry said the lack of skilled Israeli and Palestinian construction workers, as well as the instability in employing Palestinians - whose permits can be revoked due to the security situation - have created a shortage of workers. The Chinese's work pace in building high-rises was 50 percent higher than that of Israelis, Palestinians and others, the Finance Ministry said. China told Israel that it would not allow migrant builders to work on settlements in the West Bank. Construction in settlements, where some 400,000 Israelis live, accounts for about three percent of all new construction. (Ynetnews 20 September 2015)
- Israeli Army Renovating Contested Hebron Building Where Settlers Live. House purchased by settlers in Palestinian neighborhood is to serve as military post, claims Israel Defense Forces. The Israel Defense Forces is renovating a contested building in Hebron to serve as a military post that was supposed to have been temporary when the army first moved in six years ago. The soldiers were stationed in the building, on the main road leading to the Tomb of the Patriarchs in 2009. The army's presence in the house, known in the media as the "house of contention" is not supposed to affect the right of ownership of the building itself. Work began about 10 days ago, using IDF career army personnel, apparently to install plumbing. According to the army, the work was carried out with the agreement of the owners although in the past right-wing activists opposed the army's presence in the house, which they said the army has no right to use. Dror Etkis, who follows settlement policy in the territories, said with regard to the work now underway: "The time has come that every Jewish mother should know that her children in the army are responsible for getting rid of the settlers' excrement, and not only metaphorically speaking." Last April three settler families moved into the building after receiving permission from Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon. The previous month, the High Court rejected a petition by Palestinians and ruled that the building had been legally purchased by settlers. In 2012, the building was evacuated after a number of settlers squatted there. The IDF Spokesman's Office said: "The High Court ruled that the building in question was purchased legally. The soldiers are present in the building for security reasons. The renovations in the house are being carried out to meet the needs of the soldiers and with the agreement of the owners. The four-story building, located in a Palestinian neighborhood outside Kiryat Arba, on the road to the Tomb of the Patriarchs, was built by Palestinian businessmen. In 2007, a group of settlers, who claimed they had purchased the building, broke into it. The settlers were subsequently evicted by the IDF pending a court ruling on the validity of the purchase, which Palestinians claimed was based on forged documents. In March, 2014 the Supreme Court upheld a lower court ruling that the purchase was valid, and the house must be returned to the purchasers. (Haaretz 20 September 2015)

- Israeli Army to Seal Off West Bank and Gaza on Yom Kippur. Border crossing with Gaza Strip will be opened during holiday only for humanitarian cases, IDF statement says. A complete closure will be imposed on the West Bank during the Yom Kippur holiday, just as it has in previous years, Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon has decided. In addition, all border crossings between Israel and the Gaza Strip will be closed for the duration of the holiday, which starts Tuesday night, a statement issued by the Israel Defense Forces Spokesperson's Unit on Monday said. The closure is scheduled to last 36 hours, from noon on Tuesday until midnight on Wednesday. The statement added that the lifting of the closure would ultimately be determined "based on the situation assessment". (Haaretz 22 September 2015)

- Cabinet approves tougher punishments for throwing stones, firebombs. Measures include expanding conditions in which police can open fire, mandatory minimum four-year sentences and increased fines on minors' parents. The Security Cabinet on Thursday evening unanimously approved a series of measures submitted by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu aimed at cracking down on rock-throwing. Among the new measures passed was a change in the circumstances in which a police officer can open fire. Until now, opening fire could occur only when the officer's life was in danger. Now, however, police will be permitted to open fire if any lives are in danger. Public Security Minister Gilad Erdan agreed with the stance taken by the police, which stated that it is impossible to tell whether stone-throwers are minors or adults, essentially meaning that police can also shoot minors who are throwing stones or Molotov cocktails. The ministers also approved the use of Ruger rifle to disperse riots, which is already permitted in the West Bank. The Cabinet also approved mandatory minimum sentences of four years for adults who throw firebombs or rocks. The four-year sentence is one-fifth of the maximum sentence of 20 years. The minimum sentence had been temporarily set at three years. Additionally, a decision was made to increase fines on minors and their parents for throwing rocks, Molotov cocktails, or firecrackers. This includes imprisonment and fines on minors aged 14-18 and their parents and withdrawal of support payments for imprisoned minors. The prime minister also noted after the meeting that "the possibility of imposing minimum fines on the parents of minors aged 12-14 and the imposition of one year bonds on the parents of minors under age 12, will be legally evaluated." Stone throwing, which has seen a sharp uptick in recent weeks in Jerusalem, has also become common in the Negev. Since the beginning of 2014, there have been 130 recorded incidents of stone throwing in the southern region. Wednesday saw police arresting 15 local residents who were suspected of throwing rocks at a police facility in Tel Sheva. (Ynetnews 24 September 2015)
- Israel Will Never Hand Over Parts of the West Bank, Says Deputy FM Hotovely. Deputy foreign minister also says EU labeling of produce from the West Bank would be tantamount to a boycott of Israel. Handing over parts of the West Bank to the Palestinians is not "even on the list of options we're offering the Palestinians," Deputy Foreign Minister Tzipi Hotovely said in an interview on Sunday. While professing to support the creation of a Palestinian state in principle, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu never said evacuating the West Bank was an option, Hotovely averred. The interview with her was published on the Times of Israel. In the absence of a permanent foreign minister – the post is held by Netanyahu – Hotovely functions as Israel's top diplomat . Hotovely also said that any European country that introduces the labeling of settlement products will be regarded as supporting a boycott of Israel and will remove itself from playing a significant role in the Middle East conflict. She described labeling as a "red line" for Israel and threatened to downgrade Israel's economic ties with countries that implement it. The European Parliament passed a motion earlier this month supporting the labeling of products from Israeli settlements in the occupied territories. The EU Commission is expected to decide on the issue next month. Hotovsky added that Israel had mapped the European capitals which Israel believed could be persuaded not to implement EU labeling guidelines and would be embarking on a diplomatic campaign to lobby them. "Europe is Israel's number one trade partner," she said. "They, too, have something to lose." "Our concern is that once you put a label on Judea and Samaria, you put a label on Israel," she said, referring to the West Bank. "We see it as a boycott of Israel for all intents and purposes. We view it as a slippery slope. It's simply a sweeping disqualification of Israel". (Haartez 27 September 2015)

- Israeli Weekly newspaper 'Kool Ha'er', revealed that an Israeli construction company called "Euro Israel" started to market housing units in two residential buildings in a colonial project in the Israeli Settlement of Neve Ya'akov, north of Jerusalem city. This project consists of 78 housing units in 4 buildings; each building is consist of 9 floors. According to the company, and from the first stage of the project, which it included the construction of 37 housing units, they market about 22 housing units. And nowadays, the company is working in several construction projects in Jerusalem city; "Euro gold" in Har Homa settlement- 122 housing units, "Euro" project in the Israeli settlement of Pisgat Ze'ev, also the construction of 32 housing units in Ariel settlement and 96 housing units in the Israeli settlement of Mod'in. While the Israeli Company "Tserfata Shimon" get the permitting to construct three residential buildings in Har Homa settlement; each building is consist of 9 floors, which means they will construct about 142 housing units. And the new project will located in the middle of the settlement. The newspaper also revealed that the Israeli Municipality of Jerusalem and the Israeli company "Moreh" started to implement new projects in the Israeli neighborhoods of Khoufat Shamual A&B by investing about 75 million Shekel to improve the municipality serves in the Israeli settlement of Har Homa. - Ya'alon in West Bank: There will be no settlement freeze. Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon says Israel will respond with a heavy hand to any threat to its security or sovereignty, the Hebrew-language Walla website reports. Speaking during a visit to the Hebron Hills in the southern West Bank, Ya'alon also says that “there is not, nor will there be, a freeze in [settlement] construction, given that our legitimacy to settle the land has come under attack.” (Time of Israel 30 September 2015)

- Israel Intends to Authorize West Bank Outpost Bloc Containing Hundreds of Illegal Buildings. Plan revealed in response to Yesh Din petition to evacuate illegal outpost of Adei Ad, east of Shilo, built on private land and home to residents involved in violent acts against Palestinians. Israel intends to authorize a bloc of five West Bank outposts east of Shilo that covers six square kilometers and includes hundreds of illegal structures. The state submitted the announcement to the High Court of Justice in response a petition filed last year by the human rights group Yesh Din and the owners of the lands in question. The petition calls for immediate evacuation of the Adei Ad outpost because it was built without any building permits on private lands, and because outpost residents have been involved in violent acts threatening local security. In its response filed Tuesday to the High Court, the state announced its intention to authorize all the Shilo region outposts. To this end, work is being carried out to verify the borders of state lands in the area referred to as “Blue line team,” as a preliminary stage for authorizing the outposts. After the team’s work is completed, the state intends to evacuate buildings found to be on private land and authorize the buildings on state land. Sixteen buildings in Adei Ad are estimated to be on private land. The planning authorities have received from the Mateh Binyamin Regional Council a preliminary blueprint for planning construction in the location, which was discussed informally. A substantial bloc of outposts and farms were built in the late 1990s, spread over six square kilometers of state land. There are four larger outposts, each with dozens of families: Adei Ad, Kida, Esh Kodesh and Ahiya. There are in addition a number of smaller outposts, including the Yishuv Hada’at, Geulat Zion and Gal Yosef farms. The state response on Adei Ad suggests a total lack of enforcement of building violations over the Green Line. Data indicate that construction in Adei Ad began in the late 1990s, leading to 150 cases of illegal building, including 93 residential structures, nine agricultural structures, 27 instances of land development and 14 general cases. Despite the large number of cases, action was taken in only five instances to halt further construction. After the outpost was evacuated in 1999, the Civil Administration on three occasions seized portable structures and construction equipment, and twice demolished structures. Regarding claims of violence by outpost residents toward Palestinian residents, the state asserted that 36 cases were opened in 2014 in the Shilo area and the adjacent Habladim outpost for illegal political acts including attacks and causing property damage. The cases led to 11 indictments against 19 individuals. In 2015, 16 cases were opened, only two of which have led to indictments. Three of the accused are from Adei Ad; the others are from the Shilo bloc, Beit El and Samaria. The chaos in the World Zionist Organization's Settlement Division became clear in the margins of the state's response. Settlement Division officials asserted they own the rights to the land and leased them for agricultural work. But the state's response indicates that the division had only one land-leasing agreement, which was only for one year starting April 2000. Despite this, the division continued working the land as if it were its own. "Only a country that disdains the rule of law acts to authorize an outpost that the state itself admits is in the heart of a violent and criminal region," says attorney Shlomi Zacharia from Yesh Din's legal team. "Only a country that chooses to ignore the law and assists in its violation prides itself on awarding criminals rather than enforcing the law. It's illegal and unethical behavior, which attests to the depths to which the rule of law has descended". On the other hand, the head of the Mateh Binyamin Regional Council said that he welcomed the decision to authorize the outposts. "The state declared in the past that all that can be arranged will be arranged, and that is what we expect," he said. (Haaretz 1 October 2015)

- Defense Minister Ya'alon Awards Controversial Church to Settlement Bloc. Army radio reports that the area will be a tourist site – not a settler compound – in the Gush Etzion region. Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon is awarding a controversial 10-acre church compound to the Gush Etzion settlement bloc in the West Bank, Army Radio reported Thursday. The former Presbyterian church has a strategic location: on Route 60, which runs north-south throughout the West Bank. A key issue is whether settlers would move to the compound, which sits between Hebron and Gush Etzion. Eight buildings dot the site. In late May, sources told Haaretz that a nonprofit group controlled by U.S. businessman Irving Moskowitz had bought the abandoned compound near the Arroub refugee camp between Hebron and Bethlehem. That reportedly happened three years ago, with the help of a Moskowitz ally on the Jerusalem city council, Aryeh King. In recent months, the purpose of renovations at the site was reportedly concealed from the Palestinian laborers. According to Army Radio, Ya'alon had no legal authority to stop the work; in any case, there were no immediate plans for people to move in, the station said. Instead, the site would be a tourist destination. A similar version was given last week to Palestinian news agency Ma'an by attorney Arie Sokolovsky, but he said the land actually hadn't been sold and reports of a plan by settlers to move in were false. "The church owns the land and we're renovating buildings so that they can serve as a hostel for Jews, Muslims and Christians traveling in the area," he said. (Haaretz 3 October 2015)

- State Won't Revoke Funding of Illegal West Bank Outpost, Despite Attorney General's Instructions. Over $100,000 was given for infrastructure in Negohot, which has no building permits. 'Funds that were given illegally must be returned, and those responsible for the allocation should be prosecuted,' incensed Meretz chairwoman says. The Justice Ministry will not work to cancel an allocation of hundreds of thousands of shekels to build infrastructure for the Negohot outpost in the western Hebron Hills, even though the funding contravenes the attorney general's instructions as the settlement has no building permits, Deputy Attorney General Dina Zilber has said. Zilber recently informed MK Zehava Galon of Meretz of the ministry's position, although Galon had first protested the 400,000 shekel ($105,000) allocation two years ago. The funding came from the World Zionist Organization's Settlement Division, which is controlled by the Agriculture Ministry. Zilber said the Justice Ministry would only make sure that such allocations no longer occur. The Justice Ministry decided this year that the WZO's Settlement Division would no longer be allowed to fund third parties and that the government would be the only authorized body to transfer such funding. "Given the binding legal instructions in the legal opinion in general and on the issue of allocations by the Settlement Division in particular, I believe we have resolved the problem you indicate in your query," Zilber told Galon. Galon was incensed. "Funds that were given illegally must be returned, and those responsible for the allocation should be prosecuted," she said. "An absurd situation has emerged in which the sinner is rewarded, and the legal opinions of the attorney general become meaningless. "By ignoring the blatant violation of the law according to the legal opinion that came from his own office, the attorney general is undermining his authority to interpret the law for government agencies," the Meretz chairwoman continued. "Transferring funds from the state to perform work without a permit or master plan is a criminal offense and the attorney general's turning a blind eye makes a mockery of the law". At the same time, another opposition MK, Eitan Broshi of Zionist Union, called on party leader Isaac Herzog to cooperate with Likud in drawing up a clear planning policy in the settlements. According to Broshi, encouraging construction in the settlement blocs, those areas it is assumed will remain under Israeli control if an agreement with the Palestinians is ever reached, would reduce the Jewish presence in isolated areas that will make it difficult to ever separate into two states. According to Broshi's data, the number of Israelis living outside the blocs rose from 18,000 in 1993 to 110,000 in 2014. During the past six years, the number of housing starts in the isolated settlements has risen to 40 percent of all West Bank housing starts. A policy of containment, he said, would "demonstrate the government's commitment to the two-state solution, reduce the escalating friction, conserve resources and strengthen the Israeli presence in the central blocs". - Settler Group Wins Right to Run Jerusalem Archaeology Park After Appeal. Court rules against state, allows Elad to operate site adjacent to West Wall. The right-wing City of David Foundation, better known as Elad, will be allowed to operate the Jerusalem Archaeological Park adjacent to the Western Wall, after the Jerusalem District Court on Monday overturned a lower court ruling that had voided the agreement enabling it to do so. The court accepted Elad's appeal of the Jerusalem Magistrate's Court ruling in its entirety, reinstating the agreement the NGO had signed with the Company for the Reconstruction and Development of the Jewish Quarter to manage the park and the adjacent Davidson Center, both major tourist attractions located south of the Western Wall plaza. Elad manages the City of David National Park, just outside the Old City, and is also involved in settling Jews in the adjacent, predominantly Arab village of Silwan. The City of David National Park is connected to the Jerusalem Archaeological Park via a Second Temple-era drainage tunnel whose excavation was completed in 2012. For decades the archaeological park had been under the control of East Jerusalem Development Corporation, a government company. After a lengthy legal dispute, the area was transferred to the Jewish Quarter development company, which assigned Elad the right to operate the site. When news of the agreement was published in Haaretz in early 2014, it was harshly attacked both by left-wing organizations, which oppose Elad's activity, and by pluralistic Jewish organizations, because the site includes the wooden deck at Robinson's Arch that was built for the Women of the Wall and other egalitarian prayer services. The leaders of the pluralistic groups had been promised by Cabinet Secretary Avichai Mendelblit, who had negotiated the establishment of the third plaza with them, that Elad would not administer the site. Shortly afterward, the State Prosecutor's Office petitioned the Jerusalem Magistrate's Court against the agreement. That court accepted the state's arguments and canceled the agreement on grounds that the government company needed the government's approval before transferring the site to the NGO. Elad appealed the ruling in November, and on Monday judges Moshe Drori, David Cheshin and Oded Shaham ruled in its favor. The judges rejected the state's argument that transferring the site to Elad's control would harm state security, citing the testimony of the David precinct commander who praised Elad for its cooperation with police. The judges also rejected the argument that transferring the site to the right-wing group would generate incitement by Sheikh Ra'ad Salah, who heads the northern branch of the Islamic Movement in Israel. "It's hard to understand how the state chooses to rely on Salah's 'expertise,' when the state itself, less than a year ago, filed a criminal appeal against Salah who incited to racism," Drori wrote. Similarly, the court rejected the claim that the agreement would harm Israel's foreign relations, particularly ties with Jordan, and the claim that the agreement would undermine the government's negotiations with the pluralistic Jewish groups, saying these arguments were insufficient to cancel the agreement. However, during the hearings Elad agreed to relinquish control of the section of the park closest to the Western Wall, where the egalitarian prayer area is located. (Haaretz 13 October 2015)

- Is Netanyahu Responsible for Rise in Settler Numbers? In a recording of a meeting broadcast on Army Radio, Netanyahu is heard boasting that the number of settlers has grown by 120,000 during his time in power. While this is correct, it isn't due to settlement construction.. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said on Tuesday that the number of West Bank settlers has grown by about 120,000 since he took office in 2009. But while the number is correct, the reason has little to do with the pace of construction in the settlements during his tenure. In fact, since Netanyahu became prime minister in 2009, there has been less construction activity in the settlements than under any other prime minister since 1995. Netanyahu made his statement during an internal meeting on Tuesday, in an effort to rebuff growing criticism from the right. A recording of his remarks was obtained later by Michal Shemesh, a reporter for Army Radio. "The left accuses us that from 280,000 [settlers] we've risen to 400,000, and that was during years when we were told that official U.S. policy was not even one house," Netanyahu can be heard to say. "Praise God, this isn't far from the truth. It's the biggest increase in our world". This increase, however, isn't because Netanyahu has gone on a building spree. According to data from the Housing and Construction Ministry, an average of 1,554 houses a year were built in the settlements from 2009 to 2014 — fewer than under any of his recent predecessors. By comparison, the annual average was 1,881 under Ariel Sharon and 1,774 under Ehud Olmert. As for Ehud Barak, during his single full year as prime minister, in 2000, he built a whopping 5,000 homes in the settlements. The current rate is also only about half the pace of settlement construction during Netanyahu's first term of office, in 1996-99, when it averaged almost 3,000 homes a year. So why has the number of settlers increased so sharply? Due to natural growth, especially in the two ultra-Orthodox towns of Betar Ilit and Modi'in Ilit. According to the Central Bureau of Statistics, the fertility rate in the settlements is 5.01 children per woman, which is far higher than anywhere else in Israel. In the northern district, which ranks second, the fertility rate is just 3.91 children per woman. Thus in 2013, for instance, 12,129 children were born in the settlements and only 535 people died. This is also a very low death rate, which stems from the fact that the settler population is relatively young. The statistics bureau's data also shows that 74 percent of the growth in the number of settlers from 2009-2014 stemmed from natural increase. In 2014, for instance, the number of settlers rose by 14,200. Of these, 11,800, or 83 percent of the growth, was a result of natural increase (births minus deaths) and only 2,400 the result of net migration to the settlements. In 2012, by contrast, natural increase accounted for only 68 percent of the total increase in the number of settlers. (Haaretz 14 October 2015)

- Olmert, Sharon, and Barak built more in settlements than I did,' Netanyahu says. Attempts to tie Israeli building with the current wave of terror is "patently absurd" and its proponents believe in it with "religious fervor," the premier said. Rejecting suggestions that Israeli expansion of Jewish settlements in the West Bank is responsible for fueling the recent wave of Palestinian violence, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu told delegates at the World Zionist Congress in Jerusalem on Tuesday that his administrations have built less aggregate homes beyond the Green Line than his three predecessors - Ehud Olmert, Ariel Sharon, and Ehud Barak. "During my first term as prime minister, we built, on average, 3,000 housing units per year in Judea and Samaria," Netanyahu said. "When Barak was prime minister, he built 5,000 units, Sharon built 1,900 units, and Olmert built 1,700 units." "In light of the circumstances, the average number of housing units built during my terms in office dropped to 1,500 per year," the premier said. "We can have a discussion about this another time, but facts are facts," Netanyahu said. "These numbers are precise. So instead of seeing a rise in settlement construction, there has actually been a drop." In 2010, Netanyahu's government approved a 10-month freeze on construction in the settlements as a gesture to the Palestinian Authority before the start of direct peace negotiations. Attempts to tie Israeli building with the current wave of terror is "patently absurd" and its proponents believe in it with "religious fervor," he asserted, recalling Israel's 2005 unilateral withdrawal from the Gaza strip. Tel Aviv and other cities outside of Judea and Samaria are also considered settlements by the Palestinians, he added. While Netanyahu has a reputation as a strong proponent for settlement expansion, data from the Central Bureau of Statistics indicate that under Netanyahu showed housing starts in West Bank settlements dropped 19 percent and the number of finished settler homes fell 15% when compared with 2003 to 2008. Last week US Secretary of State John Kerry linked settlement building with the current wave of terror attacks here, stating that "there's been a massive increase in settlements over the course of the last few years, and now you have this violence because there's a frustration that is growing." After heated objections from Israel and Jewish groups, the State Department partially walked back Kerry's comments. "The secretary wasn't saying, 'Well now you have the settlement activity as the cause for the effect we're seeing'," a spokesman told The Jerusalem Post. "Is it a source of frustration for Palestinians? You bet it is, and the secretary observed that. But this isn't about affixing blame on either side here for the violence. What we want to see is the violence cease." Netanyahu has blamed the rise in violence on Palestinian incitement generally and on Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas specifically. Speaking on Palestinian Authority television recently, PA President Mahmoud Abbas stated that "we bless every drop of blood that has been spilled for Jerusalem, which is clean and pure blood, blood spilled for Allah, Allah willing.." "The al-Aksa [Mosque] is ours, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre is ours, and they have no right to defile them with their filthy feet. We will not allow them to, and we will do everything in our power to protect Jerusalem." The international community has given the PA a "pass," Netanyahu said Tuesday, asserting that the "core of the conflict" was the Palestinians' "persistent refusal to recognize the Jewish state." "There is no way to battle lies except to tell the truth," he added, saying that a "peace based on lies will crash against the rocks of reality." "We want a real peace" in which Jewish rights are respected, he asserted. "The biggest battle we have to fight is the battle for facts." Israel yesterday came out against a draft resolution brought before the United Nations United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization by several Arab states on behalf of the PA, which declares the Western Wall to be part of the al-Aksa mosque. Speaking to the Zionist delegates, Netanyahu stated that despite the Temple Mount being holy to Jews long before the advent of Islam, Jerusalem has no interest in changing the status quo at the site in which Jewish prayer is forbidden and the Waqf, an Islamic religious endowment, controls day to day operations. He also rejected the claims of the leaders of the Arab world that Israel wants to destroy the al-Aksa Mosque. "This lie has been 100 years old.

But going to the Temple Mount, the al-Aksa mosque stands." Israel is the only one that preserves the mosque," declared Netanyahu, saying that Islamic holy places were destroyed during the internal conflict in the Arab world. "We have witnessed a lot of changes since the last Congress, a lot of opportunities, a lot of challenges," the prime minister said. "Despite our efforts for peace we are in a campaign aimed at killing Israelis wherever they may be. We know the various attackers use Facebook to deliver messages and their intentions. We are fighting not only against physical attacks, but also attack against the truth." (IPOST 20 October 2015)

- Pro-settler lobby: Apply Israeli law in settlement building. Ministers join 'Land of Israel' bloc in demanding more construction in West Bank. The Land of Israel Caucus held its inaugural meeting in the 20th Knesset on Wednesday, with members from the coalition and opposition, and support from ministers. MK Yoav Kisch (Likud), who co-chairs the caucus with MK Bezalel Smotrich (Bayit Yehudi), began with a call to action to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Yisrael Beytenu chairman Avigdor Liberman to "put your anger and egos aside and work together in a united, right-wing government. "Yisrael Beytenu belongs in the coalition," he said, adding that a stable, strong right-wing coalition can help the caucus obtain its goals. Kisch also called on caucus members to sign his bill applying Israeli building and construction laws to the West Bank. The bill would allow residents of the area to go through the regular bureaucracy process when building beyond the Green Line, without needing approval from the IDF, which governs in the West Bank. "The settlers in Israeli towns in Judea and Samaria have a great difficulty when it comes to laws relating to land or to building and construction, from building pergolas to more significant and larger things, and that is because the laws do not apply to them," the bill's explanatory portion states. Bills applying Israeli laws to the West Bank have been controversial in the past, with the Left considering them to be a form of creeping annexation. Kisch's bill is almost identical to one proposed by now-Deputy Foreign Minister Tzipi Hotovely in the 18th Knesset. "This will make life significantly easier for residents of Judea and Samaria, especially in the bigger towns," Kisch said. Kisch told the many caucus supporters crowding in the conference room in the Knesset that the group is meant to "spearhead resolving and developing settlements in Judea and Samaria" and to "protect the rights and security of its residents." One of the caucus' central goals will be to "totally bury the Talia Sasson report and fully adopt the Levy report," Kisch said. The 2005 Sasson report, commissioned by the Sharon government found Israeli state institutions had diverted millions of shekels to build illegal settlements and outposts. The Levy Report, published in 2012 by a committee commissioned by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, said that Israel does not occupy the West Bank, that settlements are legal, recommends authorizing outposts, and proposes guidelines for building new settlements. Knesset Speaker Yuli Edelstein expressed his support for the caucus, saying that “as a resident of Judea and Samaria for the past 28 years... I would like to see the caucus do practical things, starting with legislation. If [Kisch’s] bill will make things more simple, the caucus will have justified itself for the coming years.” Edelstein added that the broad representation of MKs from different parties in the caucus makes him optimistic. “Ideology is the basis of [the caucus],” he said. “Anyone who doesn’t think we have a right to Judea and Samaria wouldn’t be here.” The Land of Israel Caucus in the 20th Knesset is made up of MKs from Likud, Kulanu, Bayit Yehudi, Yisrael Beytenu and UTJ. MK Eli Cohen said most his party Kulanu’s MKs support the caucus, because settlements are important to them. “We have a national and socioeconomic interest to strengthen them. We want to give these towns the operative tools to continue developing,” Cohen said. Some in the committee expressed disappointment that the government is not building enough in the West Bank. Agriculture Minister Uri Ariel recounted that on Tuesday, “Netanyahu bragged that he built less than anyone else... I’ve never heard anything like it and I hope not to again. “There is not enough construction in Jerusalem, and Judea and Samaria,” Ariel added. Ma’aleh Adumim Mayor Benny Kashriel complained that the caucus has existed for six years and it hasn’t succeeded in bringing more construction. He threatened not to vote for Likud in the future, saying: “No construction, no votes.” Welfare Minister Haim Katz said Kashriel is right to complain, and lamented that “the people in power think being quiet shows strength. “We’re not trying to take over new land. We’re asking for what we need to live,” Katz said. “When you need me, I will be there to support you.” Settlement activist Daniella Weiss wondered why the government isn’t trying to build on unsettled land. Tourism Minister Yariv Levin, a former caucus chairman, warned that “we may have to make difficult decisions in the coming days... but I am convinced we will come out stronger. “We should apply sovereignty to the entire Land of Israel,” Levin said. - Netanyahu approves urban planning in settlement. Following protests in front of his house, the prime minister agrees to an urban building plan for Itamar the West Bank. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu this week approved an urban development plan for Itamar settlement in the West Bank’s Shomron Regional Council, one week after a protest tent opposite his house was dismantled. The decision retroactively approves buildings that are already standing in Itamar and further grants permits for the construction of schools, kindergartens and other public institutions. Itamar has become a symbol for many settlers, following the massacre of the Fogel family in 2011. Immediately following the murders, many demanded the approval of an urban development plan for the settlement. Settlers claimed that the gap in security arrangements for the settlement caused by the lack of approval for a building plan led to the massacre not being prevented. The approval was one of the central goals of Yossi Dagan, the head of the Shomron Regional Council. Dagan established the protest tent outside Netanyahu's house after the murder of Naama and Eitam Henkin a few weeks ago. It is understood that the approval does not allow for additional homes to be built, but rather only buildings that will serve the residential houses that are already in place. While waiting for the approval, children in Itamar were unable to attend school in a fixed location. The Ministry of Finance only recently provided funds to the Shomron Regional Council for the building of a day care center, but because the urban development plan had not yet been approved, the building never became active. "Small approvals such as these are a mockery and do nothing for settlements," the Yesha Council, which represents numerous municipal councils, said regarding the decision. "We are talking about plans that include new neighborhoods and expansion of settlements, but in practice they are reduced to plans that only include what has already been built, with no approval for new housing units," the council added. "Approvals that only deal with existing buildings are also only given after a delay and offer nothing new. This building freeze is by design and the halt in construction is the current government's biggest failure." Dagan said: "The decision to approve an urban development plan for Itamar is ultimately just a correction to a years-long injustice to Israelis living in the settlement, who have had to deal with murderous terror attacks. "The children in Itamar, like children in Tel Aviv, have the right to an education in kindergartens and schools in a permanent building and not just in caravans," Dagan continued. "The approved plan only relates to existing structures and unfortunately does not give any momentum to building in the settlement," he added. "It must be emphasized that we still expect the prime minister to make a meaningful turnaround and stop the strangulation of construction in Judea and Samaria. "We also need approval for settlements to develop according to their needs and for new buildings and new settlements," Dagan continued. Dagan refused to confirm whether he had reached an agreement with the prime minister to fold up the tent outside the PM's house. After the tent was packed up Dagan put out a vague statement, saying that progress had been made on the issue of security but things remained stuck regarding construction. (Ynetnews 23 October 2015)

- Government leaves most settlements out of tax-break list. MK Yoel Hasson (Zionist Union) said that the Likud gave into religious right-wing extremists.

The Finance Committee is prepared to vote this week, possibly as early as Monday, on a new list of periphery communities that qualify for tax breaks. The list excludes most West Bank settlements, as well as some Israeli cities, such as Ma'alot and Nahariya, which had previously enjoyed the tax benefits. A meeting between Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and the heads of coalition on Sunday affirmed the list that was prepared by Finance Committee Chairman Moshe Gafni. The number of periphery towns and cities to receive tax breaks will increase from 192 to 407, based on new eligibility criteria. The budget for the expanded list will go up from NIS 850 million to NIS 1.2 billion. Kiryat Arba and settlements in the Har Hebron region of the West Bank are among 28 Judea and Samaria communities included in the slate of periphery towns to receive a six percent tax break, because they meet the same criteria as the other municipalities. On Sunday, the coalition party heads added the Jewish community of Hebron to the list. MK Bezalel Smotrich (Bayit Yehudi) called last week for 60 settlements under high security risk to be given tax benefits, saying that the Prime Minister's Office and Finance Ministry agreed to do so, but Knesset Finance Committee chairman Moshe Gafni (UTJ) was adamantly opposed, saying it would be too costly, and his position was accepted on Sunday. Instead, the coalition party leaders agreed to give the settlements under risk security grants. Smotrich said Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu is "trampling settlements in Judea and Samaria" and called on his party leader, Education Minister Naftali Bennett, not to accept the outcome. "This is another way that Netanyahu is harming settlements. In the last two years, Bibi hasn't allowed planning or construction, and now he is excluding them from tax benefits," Smotrich stated. Deputy Housing Minister Jackie Levy, however, was satisfied with the decision, and thanked Netanyahu, Finance Minister Kahlon, Gafni and government liaison to the Knesset Tourism Minister Yariv Levin for "standing up to pressure and fulfilling their promise to those fighting the just battle for residents of the periphery, which bore fruit." Still, towns in the periphery whose benefits were slashed lamented the decision, and some threatened to go on strike. Nahariya Mayor Jacky Sabag said that the towns whose benefits were cut will go on strike on Wednesday, and that he and Ma'alot Mayor Shlomo Bohbot are working on a plan to fight the changes. According to Sabag, many people decide to live in the periphery because of the tax break. "Nahariya is the biggest city in the [Western

Galilee] region and it provides work to many residents and employers,” he stated. “If the percentages of the benefit are reduced, it will be a serious blow that we cannot absorb.” Acre mayor Shimon Lankri wrote a letter to Netanyahu and Kahlon demanding that his town continue to receive tax benefits. The new criteria “can cause great damage to the continued development of the city and will cause people to leave,” he wrote. “In the name of the residents of the city of Acre, I ask you to oppose the new outline, examine the map of beneficiaries in a measured, responsible way and leave the tax benefits the way they are today.” MK Yoel Hasson (Zionist Union) said that the Likud gave into religious right-wing extremists. “Netanyahu lied to periphery residents. 10,565 residents of Nahariya voted for the Likud in the last election. Not a year has passed since Likud MKs went to get votes from the periphery, and today they’re being thrown in the trash in favor of the true guests of honor in the Likud, residents of isolated settlements,” Hasson stated. MK Esawi Frej (Meretz) wondered “how twisted can a government’s priorities be if it gives tax benefits to Jewish ‘provocateurs’ in Hebron and takes them away from Nahariya and Ma’alot.” According to Frej, the decisions were made “under threats from Smotriches” and shows that those who threaten end up benefiting. - Ya’alon: There is no West Bank settlement freeze. “The Palestinians didn’t come to the [negotiating] table even when we froze construction,” defense minister said. Israel plans to continue to build responsibly in Judea and Samaria, Defense Minister Moshe Ya’alon said on Sunday, attempting to dispel rumors that Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu had promised the Americans he would stop Jewish building in the West Bank. “We haven’t frozen construction,” Ya’alon told Israel Radio. “No decision was taken to do so.” The only freeze Netanyahu has ever imposed was a moratorium on settlement starts for ten months from November 2009 to September 2010. That moratorium was the result of American pressure, but in the end, it didn’t lead to anything, Ya’alon noted. “Since then we have been building,” he said. One of the Palestinians’ criteria for the resumption of talks with Israel is a freeze on settlement construction and Jewish building in Judea and Samaria. It has also turned to the International Criminal Court, which has yet to make a decision on the issue. The US has termed such construction as harmful to the peace process, but Ya’alon said he didn’t believe that halting building over the pre- 1967 lines would move the peace process forward. “The Palestinians didn’t come to the [negotiating] table even when we froze construction,” Ya’alon said. Israel, he said, has continued to build responsibly in Judea and Samaria with an understanding that such activity is under “unjust” intense international scrutiny, both legally with regard to the ICC and from the UN Security Council. On Saturday night, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu also issued a tweet in which he said, "Israel has not made any commitments not to authorize new building in Judea and Samaria." But settlers have argued for months that there is a de-facto freeze, because Netanyahu has failed to advance plans that would allow construction to continue in the future. - Palestinians to Ask UN to Set Deadline for Ending Occupation. Saeb Erekat announces that Palestinians will seek international protection in Security Council as well establishment of commission of inquiry into current violence. Saeb Erekat, secretary general of the Palestine Liberation Organization's steering and monitoring committee, announced Sunday that the PLO and Arab League are preparing a motion for the UN Security Council that sets a deadline for ending Israel's occupation of the West Bank. At a press conference in the Palestinian embassy in Cairo, Erekat said that alongside this proposal, Palestinians will seek international protection in the Security Council as well the establishment of a commission of inquiry into the current violence. Erekat said he arrived in Cairo straight from Amman to update the Arab League secretary general Nabil Elaraby and Egyptian Foreign Minister Sameh Shoukry on his talks with U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry on Saturday. A senior Palestinian official told Haaretz that the Palestinian leadership is aware of the criticism of it in the West Bank and East Jerusalem, adding that reaching understandings on the Al-Aqsa mosque, as Kerry and Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu are seeking, would be insufficient. The official said the Palestinian leadership could not present such arrangements as a diplomatic achievement to its public in light of the violent discontent and Israeli crackdown in the West Bank and the Palestinian neighborhoods of Jerusalem. "The leadership is aware that the main issue is the occupation and its repercussions, and will try to use the recent events to present clear demands to the UN and international community, especially the Security Council decision to end the occupation and establish an international commission of inquiry that would examine the circumstances that led to the current violence". - PM considers canceling residency of 80,000 East Jerusalem Palestinians. Netanyahu raises possibility in cabinet meeting of canceling residency status of East Jerusalem Palestinians who live on other side of the separation barrier sparking criticism from ministers. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu recently raised the possibility of canceling the residency status of the 80,000 Palestinians living in East Jerusalem neighborhoods on the other side of the separation wall. Shuafat refugee camp and Kafr Aqab would be among the affected neighborhoods. Netanyahu brought up the need to address the situation in East Jerusalem's neighborhoods beyond the wall during a cabinet meeting that took place two weeks ago. "There is no enforcement there, no law," Netanyahu said. "We need to examine the possibility of canceling their residency. There needs to be a discussion about it." The prime minister also raised the need to examine how law enforcement and security can be improved in these neighborhoods through the deployment of extra police and army units. The neighborhoods in question are within Jerusalem's municipal boundaries but lie outside the wall and are considered extremely problematic from a security perspective. However, since there has been no further discussion of the issue it is not yet certain whether this is a serious plan. Netanyahu's proposal drew responses from a number of ministers, who were surprised to hear him talk of disengagement. MK Israel Katz had originally raised the topic of the neighborhoods beyond the wall, saying that the area had been abandoned. In response, Netanyahu suggested the possibility of preventing entry to the rest of Jerusalem from those areas. "That is a far-reaching decision which requires a referendum, because it would involve giving up territory," Katz remarked in response to Netanyahu. Other lawmakers taking part in the discussion said that the matter affected residents with blue identity cards and that they could not simply be cut off on a whim. It was subsequently agreed that a special session would be convened to discuss the fate of the neighborhoods beyond the wall. "Netanyahu spoke about a situation which he seems not to fully understand," a minister said after the cabinet meeting. "We are talking about an unequivocal division of Jerusalem." "All of Netanyahu's lies have been exposed," said MK Yoel Hasson of the Zionist Union. "After throwing the periphery into the gutter, Netanyahu decided to break another one of his election promises. "There will no longer be a united Jerusalem. Hysteria and indulgence have brought us to the decision of the Prime Minister's Office to disengage from East Jerusalem," Hasson continued. "This comes without the backing of the international community, without the agreement of the people and with terror spreading throughout the streets," he added. Jerusalem Police erected a concrete wall along a street between the Jerusalem neighborhoods of Armon Hanatziv and Jabal Mukaber in the east of the city last week. The move was billed as an attempt to put a stop to frequent stone-throwing and throwing of Molotov cocktails at homes in the area. At the time, the Jerusalem municipality clarified that the wall was a temporary measure aimed at reducing injuries and damage to property in stone-throwing incidents. (Ynetnews 26 October 2015)

- IDF legalizes homes in four West Bank settlements. Samaria Regional Council head Yossi Dagan has lobbied for the legalization, since taking office over the summer. A Civil Administration committee approved retroactive zoning plans for four West Bank settlements, a move which legalized already existing homes in the authorized communities. Two of the settlements, Sansana (97 housing units) and Yakir (377 housing units) are inside the route of the security barrier and the other two, Shiloh (94 housing units) and Itamar (187 housing units) are considered to be isolated settlements outside of the fence. Samaria Regional Council head Yossi Dagan had lobbied for the legalization since taking office over the summer. He made the request during his first phone conversation with Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and he continued to lobby for it, particularly after Palestinian gunmen killed Eitam and Na'ama Henkin as they drove home in his region with their four children on October 1. Dagan was startled when their death was not followed by an announcement of more building. The absence of new settler building approvals was one of the factors that swayed him to pitch a protest tent in front of Netanyahu's office. He was particularly concerned by Netanyahu's failure to authorize a zoning plan for the Itamar settlement in Samaria despite pledging to do so after Palestinians infiltrated that community in 2011 and killed five members of the Fogel family. A source close to Dagan said that he took down the protest tent only after securing a promise from Netanyahu to approve the Itamar zoning plan. On Thursday, Dagan said that the approvals right a small injustice that had been done to the residents of Judea and Samaria, because without the zoning planes, the homeowners lacked full rights with regard to their properties. The buildings fell into a gray legal area because they were constructed in recognized settlements but had not been fully approve because of the absence of a zoning plan. Those who live in Judea and Samaria, "give their all to the State of Israel and deserve the same right" as those who live in Tel Aviv and Ra'anana, Dagan said. Peace Now executive director Yariv Oppenheimer said that, once again, Netanyahu has proved that he prefers settlers to peace. "Once again Netanyahu has caved to the settlers. He approved building just to get rid of one protest tent," Oppenheimer said. (IPOST 30 October 2015)
- Israel: New diplomats will be trained to defend settlements. Israeli soldiers shot dead a knife-wielding Palestinian who tried to stab them on Sunday in the West Bank city of Hebron, the military said, in the latest violence of a bloody six-week spell. The military said the shooting took place during a riot and that no Israelis were harmed. Later Sunday, a Palestinian rammed his car into a group of Israelis standing on the side of the road in the West Bank, police spokeswoman Luba

Samri said. She said the attacker escaped and security forces were searching the area. Three people were hurt, one seriously, said Eli Bin of Israel's rescue service. A series of Palestinian attacks began in mid-September over tensions surrounding a sensitive Jerusalem holy site and have since spread across Israel, the West Bank and Gaza. It has been accompanied by widespread unrest, including clashes between Palestinian stone-throwers and Israeli troops. Israel has blamed the Palestinian attacks on what it says is anti-Israel incitement by Palestinian political and religious leaders. Palestinians say the violence is largely driven by the hopelessness many Palestinians feel after nearly half a century of Israeli military rule, with no end in sight. In recent days, Hebron has become a flashpoint of Israeli-Palestinian violence, with near-daily deadly confrontations at Israeli checkpoints that guard ultra-nationalist Jewish settlers in the center of the city. In these incidents, Palestinians have been shot dead after the military said they stabbed or tried to stab soldiers. Hebron has been divided since the late 1990s, as part of what was meant to be an interim agreement ahead of a final peace deal that never materialized. Israel controls the city center, where 850 Jewish settlers live, while the remaining areas of the city are under Palestinian self-rule. Also Sunday, Israel's deputy foreign minister said diplomats in training will now visit the West Bank and be taught how to defend the status of Jewish settlements there. Tzipi Hotovely told Israel's Army Radio that she initiated changes in the course curriculum to include a greater emphasis on the Jewish people's ancient links to the land. "There are systematic Palestinian attempts to rewrite history and cut the deep ties between the Jewish people and its historic capital," she said. She said the course will include compulsory tours to the City of David, a Jewish enclave in mostly Arab east Jerusalem, seized by Israel in the 1967 war from Jordan and claimed by the Palestinians as part of their future state. Hotovely says it is important to stress that Jewish settlements are legal "by law and custom." The international community generally considers settlement in lands captured in the 1967 war to be illegal and illegitimate. With Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu also serving as foreign minister, Hotovely oversees the office's day-to-day operations. (Business Insider 1 November 2015)

- The Judaization of an East Jerusalem Neighborhood Gains Steam. The NGO Ateret Cohanim is cooperating with the government to establish a whole Jewish quarter inside the Silwan neighborhood. Earlier this month, Jerusalem police chief Moshe Edri submitted an affidavit to the Supreme Court, explaining why the police couldn't help remove a synagogue built illegally on privately owned Palestinian land in the settlement Givat Ze'ev. According to Edri, because of the current terror wave, the police couldn't divert forces for such a task. As the government stated to the Supreme Court, "the assessment by the Jerusalem district commander is that the security situation requires a further postponement of the demolition of the building". But the next day, the day of the planned demolition, the police found hundreds of officers for a different assignment: blocking all entrances to East Jerusalem neighborhood Silwan to protect officials implementing an eviction order. The police let a mover's truck reach the home of the Abu Nab family, who were moving out so Jews could move in. The eviction of the Abu Nab family, after a long legal battle, is the latest success of the NGO Ateret Cohanim – with the police's close cooperation – in expanding the Jewish presence in the heart of Silwan. Unlike settler group Elad, which buys houses in the City of David near the Old City, Ateret Cohanim aims to establish a Jewish neighborhood in the very center of an Arab one. The takeover of the houses culminates dozens of lawsuits against Palestinian families to persuade them to move in exchange for money, and extreme financial and legal pressure against the families that refuse. In this, Ateret Cohanim enjoys the remarkably close cooperation of the authorities. Ateret Cohanim portrays itself as an NGO that goes beyond the letter of the law; one that in its benevolence pays Palestinian families to move despite the eviction order they already face. In any case, the Judaization of Silwan, with all its consequences, is orchestrated by one man, referred to here as M. The Supreme Court has prohibited the publishing of his name or those of Palestinian residents with whom he has signed agreements. Justice Isaac Amit granted M.'s claim, supported by the attorney general, that his life would be in jeopardy if his name were published. Haaretz argued, through attorney Tal Lieblich of the law firm Lieblich-Moser, that the principle is not protecting a life but defending Ateret Cohanim's right to do property deals, with all the security and political ramifications, far from the public eye. And in any case, this argument goes, M. is already well known in Silwan. M. lives in a West Bank settlement and has been involved in property deals in Hebron. Silwan residents say he has almost unlimited funds at his disposal and enjoys close relations with the police, the Custodian of Absentee Property and other authorities. In the early 2000s, he began his activities in the Batn al-Hawa neighborhood, later to be named the Yemenite Village by Ateret Cohanim. The project would substantially change the character of the small neighborhood. (Haaretz 2 November 2015)

- EU to publish guidelines on the consumer labeling of settlement products The European Union is expected to publish in the next few weeks its long anticipated guidelines on the consumer labeling of Israeli products produced over the pre-1967 lines – in east Jerusalem, the West Bank and the Golan Heights. The impending EU labeling of what it calls “settlement products” has been a contentious issue between Brussels and Jerusalem since 2012. Monday night an Israeli diplomat said, “We expect the guidelines to be published soon, possibly within days.” The official added, “We’re trying to convince the European Union and its member states that this is a mistake. It has an element of discrimination to it and does not in any way help the diplomatic process.” Israel took issue with the publication of the guidelines at time when the Palestinian leadership refuses to hold direct talks with Israel and during a period in which, since October 1, Palestinian assailants have killed 11 Israelis and wounded more than 100 in a series of some 60 attacks. “If anything, the publication of these guidelines now gives the Palestinians a prize for their terrorism and obstinacy. It also supports the overall atmosphere of Israeli boycotts,” the official said. The guidelines, to be published out of Brussels under the guidance of the EU foreign policy chief Federica Mogherini, do not need to be put to a vote. The document simply puts together already existing guidelines and legislation with regard to “settlement products.” It is designed to help EU member states understand what the law is with regard to the labeling of such products. The EU considers Jewish communities over the pre-1967 lines in east Jerusalem, the Golan Heights and the West Bank to be illegal under international law. For over a decade, Israeli products produced over the pre-1967 lines have been exempt from Israel’s free trade agreement with the EU. Codes have been placed on the products to allow EU custom officials to properly determine if the products were produced within the Green Line or over it. These guidelines would provide European consumers in stores with that same information. Under pressure from the United States, the EU backed away from its push to publish the settlement guidelines during the nine-month negotiations period brokered by US Secretary of State John Kerry that ended without any results in April 2014. Since then the peace process has been frozen. All attempts to bring the two sides together have failed. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has called on Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas to resume direct talks immediately without any preconditions. Abbas has refused to hold such talks unless Israel agrees to withdraw to the pre-

1967 lines and to stop all Jewish building in east Jerusalem and the West Bank. In the absence of any peace process member states have pushed Mogherini to move forward with the publication of the guidelines. Last week Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas' visit to Mogherini in Brussels and spoke to her about the danger settlement building poses any possibly of a two-state solution. Israel has longed claimed that settlement building is not a stumbling block to peace and that the main issue is the Palestinian refusal to recognize that Israel is the homeland for the Jewish people. When Netanyahu met with Mogherini on the sidelines of the United Nations General Assembly in New York at the start of October, he said, that for many Israelis product labeling recalls dark days in Europe. He warned that such action also hardens Israeli domestic opinion. On Tuesday, Deputy Foreign Minister Tzipi Hotovely is expected to head to the Barkan Industrial Park in the Samaria region of the West Bank to speak against settlement product labeling. On Sunday, Knesset Speaker Yuli Edelstein attacked the overall issue of boycotting settlement products at a Knesset meeting with Samaria Regional Council head Yossi Dagan and a visiting delegation of Italian Jews. - Israel Moves to Green Light 2,200 New Settlement Units, Recognizes Outposts. Regional master plan approved last week will see two outposts retroactively approved, and existing settlements get thousands of more homes. Israel's civilian planning committee for construction in the West Bank moved last week to green light some 2,200 new housing units within existing settlements and retroactively recognize two outposts, most likely in a bid to preempt legal attempts by Palestinians and rights groups to see the sites evacuated. The move is only preliminary and is still subject to changes before the new units break ground. The Higher Planning Council of the Civil Administration agreed to advance a master plan for the Ma'aleh Michmash area east of Ramallah that will retroactively approve two outposts and add thousands of homes to the settlements in the region. The plan includes the settlements of Ma'aleh Michmash, Rimonim, Kochav Hashahar, Tel Zion and Psagot, and the area south of the settlement of Ofra. The plan was originally submitted in 2014, and last month Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon gave the green light for the council to discuss it. A hearing was held on October 21 and a decision was reached on November 3 and published on Thursday. Ya'alon's adviser on settlement issues, Koby Eliraz, attended the council hearing, which is considered unusual. The approval was apparently given in anticipation of a High Court of Justice hearing scheduled for Wednesday on a petition by the Yesh Din organization and Palestinians from the area who want to evacuate the Mitzpeh Danny outpost, which the plan seeks to recognize. Under the plan, by 2030 there will be 800 homes in Ma'aleh Michmash, which serves as the central land reserve in the region, while 300 more homes will be added to Kochav Hashahar. All told, some 2,200 homes will be added to the area's settlements. To reach that ambitious goal, the plan seeks to regularize the Mitzpeh Danny and Neveh Erez outposts. The plan also includes tourism sites and an education complex. The Higher Planning Council agreed to submit the plan for public comment, subject to augmentations the council is demanding. This is only a very preliminary stage in the process on the route to construction; after the comment period there will be hearings on the objections, after which the plan will be submitted for validation. Later on, it will be possible to draw up more limited plans that will lead to actual construction. (Haaretz 9 November 2015)

- While the prime minister is in the US, Jerusalem's committee for planning and construction is expected to approve on Wednesday the building of 891 new housing units in the neighborhood of Gilo, which is located beyond the Green Line. The plan will see the construction of new homes in an empty area between Gilo and the Palestinian village of Beit Jala. The area is under ownership of several bodies, including the Israel Land Administration and KKL-JNF. In order to issue a building permit, all plots will have to come under one ownership, and then be re-divided. The plan was submitted and approved in 2013, but the planning was stopped as a result of the unofficial construction freeze in Jerusalem. After the committee approves the re-division of the plots, it will essentially green light the project, allowing it to move forward. The Jerusalem municipality said in response: "This is not an approval of construction plans, as the plans have been approved two years ago in a district committee. This is a strictly technical process of correcting the internal borders of the plots." (Ynetnews 11 November 2015)
- Defense Ministry, Treasury Agree on $15.6 Billion Defense Budget for 2016. Both claim victory after deal, but army seems to have held ground on major issues. Next year's defense budget will be about 60.5 billion shekels ($15.6 million), according to a decision reached Sunday by Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon and Finance Minister Moshe Kahlon, and approved by a Knesset defense committee. The official budget will be less, 56.1 billion shekels, but the two ministers have already agreed on an extra 4.4 billion shekels in funding the defense establishment will receive in 2016. The defense budget committee, headed by MK Tzachi Hanegbi (Likud), approved the budget by 8 votes to 4. A good atmosphere has reportedly prevailed in the talks between the Finance Ministry, Defense Ministry and Israel Defense Forces this year, and in recent days both sides made major efforts to present the budget deal as a historic breakthrough. However, it seems the changes are less dramatic than the two ministries made them out to be. The defense establishment will receive extra funding beyond the official budget next year, and agreements on other matters do not particularly conform to the recommendations of last summer's Locker Committee on the defense budget, which Ya'alon and the IDF brass opposed. The defense establishment compromised on some points, but was able to block changes that it did not want. The result is that the treasury has agreed to the multiyear plan formulated by IDF Chief of Staff Gadi Eisenkot, with some minor amendments. The agreement does not place real pressure on the defense establishment to streamline, except for some improvements to defense-establishment transparency that will help the treasury. The defense establishment is especially proud of the fact it was able to quash the treasury's demands that certain items – including the move of IDF military bases to the Negev; security for oil rigs at sea, to be provided by the navy; and the privatization of Israel's military industries – be funded completely from within. Funding for these projects will still remain external to the defense budget. However, it seems the Finance Ministry understands these agreements differently than defense officials, because if the Finance Ministry believes the defense establishment is not meeting its obligations to streamline, it is expecting to go back to demanding internal defense funding for some of these projects. Security sources say the sides have agreed that the defense budget could exceed 60.5 billion shekels in future years. However, this question is also open to interpretation and the details have yet to be hammered out. The treasury and Defense Ministry have also agreed in principle to further shorten service for men, by two months to 30 months (beginning in 2020). It also decided on partial implementation of the Goren Committee's recommendation to restrict the numbers of disabled veterans receiving full benefits, although this will not affect disabled soldiers already receiving benefits. The sides also reached agreement on pension conditions – in favor of the Defense Ministry's position. The IDF and Defense Ministry were strongly opposed to the Locker Committee's recommendation that very few officers should receive bridging pensions when they retire from the army at age 42, instead receiving a retirement bonus. In the end, the sides agreed on a model proposed by another committee and different from the Locker idea: The number of career officers reaching full pension age will be reduced by establishing another exit point from the career army at age 35. In addition, the army will hand over about 40 of its functions every year to civilians, in units like the Military Advocate General and the chief of staff's financial adviser, thereby also reducing the number of officers reaching full or partial pension age. This will mean only a few hundred officers will receive bridging pensions. However, implementation will depend mainly on the good intentions of the army; there is no real external oversight on the matter. The bottom line is that the ability of the treasury to oversee or enforce the agreements is limited, with Kahlon relying mainly on Chief of Staff Eisenkot's reforms. The latter has already shown he is willing to compromise and take risks to improve the readiness of the army. These are important steps, but they remain the responsibility of the IDF, without the treasury or other entities being able to exert real influence. (Haartez 15 November 2015)

- Netanyahu to ask High Court of Justice to allow state to relocate Givat Ze'ev synagogue. The community of worshipers who have used the synagogue for the last two decades were not involved in the purchase of the property and have spent the last year fighting to save the synagogue. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Sunday night agreed to appeal to the High Court of Justice to delay, for one last time, the demolition of the Ayelet HaShachar in the Givat Ze'ev settlement to allow for the structure to be relocated to a nearby plot of land. The High Court of Justice had ordered the synagogue to be demolished by November 18th, after it was discovered that documents with regard to the purchase of the property from its Palestinian owners had been forged. The community of worshipers who have used the synagogue for the last two decades were not involved in the purchase of the property and have spent the last year fighting to save the synagogue. Netanyahu held a number of consultations in his office on Sunday, including with Education Minister Naftali Bennett who heads the Bayit Yehudi party, Minister of the Development of the Negev and Galilee and Periphery Aryeh Deri who heads the Shas party and Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon. Late at night, after further meetings that included Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked (Bayit Yehudi) and Public Security Minister Gilad Erdan (Likud), Netanyahu decided to act on a proposal by Deri to relocate the synagogue. If the structure cannot be moved, than much of the interior would be relocated. The High Court of Justice, must approve the deal, for it to go into effect. The justices have already accepted a number of delay since the initial High Court ruling to raze the synagogue last summer. First the demolition deadline was delayed because of the High Holiday season. Then it was put off again so as not to divert the attention security forces who were combating a wave of Palestinian terror that began on October 1. The High Court of Justice granted an addition extension after police said they feared right-wing extremists would respond to the demolition by executing "price-tag" attacks of revenge against innocent

Palestinians, thereby further inflaming the already existing violence. The battle over the small one-story stone synagogue began seven years ago the nongovernmental group Yesh Din petitioned the court against the synagogue after it was discovered that documents relating to the purchase of its property from Palestinian land owners were forged. In 2014, a court ordered the synagogue destroyed. Located just outside of Jerusalem, Givat Ze'ev has a population of almost 15,000 and is the fifth-largest West Bank settlement. - Illegally Built Synagogue in West Bank Settlement to Be Replaced in Compromise Deal. The synagogue, built on private Palestinian land, was supposed to be demolished Tuesday, but state says its demolition by force would 'lead to bloodshed'. A settlement synagogue that is due to be demolished Tuesday will be replaced by a state-funded structure, according to an agreement reached Monday. The Ayelet Hashahar synagogue in Givat Ze'ev, just north of Jerusalem, was built on privately-owned Palestinian land and without building permits. It is due to be demolished Tuesday by order of the High Court of Justice. The State Prosecutor's Office petitioned the High Court last night to postpone the demolition, after the state reached a compromise agreement with the synagogue's rabbi and worshippers. Under the agreement, the dismantling of the synagogue will be begin tomorrow and it will be replaced by a legal structure on a nearby site. "The demolition of the synagogue using force will lead to bloodshed," the state argued in its petition. The court has not yet ruled on the petition. The estimated 5.2 million shekels ($1.34 million) cost of the new synagogue will be covered by the state. The synagogue was originally scheduled for demolition in July 2012, but the deadline has been postponed several times. Rabbi Azriel Cohen and local council head Yossi Avrhami agreed that the various auxiliary buildings around the synagogue will be demolished Tuesday, while dismantling of the synagogue will start tomorrow and take no more than 21 days. The compromise was reached in a meeting convened by the prime minister with ministers, Dery, Bennett and Ya'alon. Rabbi Cohen said that once the new building was arranged they would evacuate the synagogue and allow it to be dismantled. He added that according to Jewish law a synagogue cannot be destroyed or abandoned before a new and better one exists to replace it. The IDF's Civil Administration is responsible for demolishing the buildings, while the Jerusalem police are responsible for providing security. Dozens, if not hundreds, of people who oppose the demolition are staying in the synagogue for now, in an attempt to prevent the demolition. (Haaretz 17 November 2015)

- Netanyahu Approves 454 New Housing Units Beyond Green Line. Projects in Jerusalem settlement Ramat Shlomo and neighborhood Ramot had long been frozen for fear of international backlash. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu approved Monday the immediate marketing of land for the construction of 436 housing units in the Jerusalem settlement of Ramat Shlomo and 18 new housing units in the Jerusalem neighborhood of Ramot, which is also beyond the Green Line. Construction of these housing units had long been frozen by the prime minister, out of fear of international backlash. The Jerusalem Municipality's Planning and Building Committee had planned to discuss the construction of 88 housing units in Ramat Shlomo two weeks ago, but the meeting was postponed due to orders from the prime minister's office, according to a senior city official. The prime minister, the source explained, hoped to avoid a diplomatic embarrassment during his trip to Washington, where he met with U.S. President Barack Obama last week. The U.S. administration is particularly sensitive to the construction plans in the neighborhood, as they were first announced during U.S. Vice President Joe Biden's visit to Israel in 2010, and led to a diplomatic crisis. MK Omer Bar-Lev (Zionist Union) said in response to Netanyahu's decision that the prime minister is "acting like a child who waits for his parents go to bed to sneak out and watch television. As usual, he is cynically taking advantage of the situation to pass his provocative and defiant decision under the radar. Why thaw the construction in Ramat Shlomo now? Because all the world powers are preoccupied with the murderous attack in France and won't be paying attention to denounce the move?" In May of this year, less than 24 hours after the new Israeli government was formed, the United States objected to the controversial plan to build new Jewish homes in East Jerusalem. U.S. State Department spokesman Jeff Rathke told reporters the administration was "disappointed" and "concerned" over government approval of the construction plans for Ramat Shlomo in East Jerusalem. "This is a disappointing development as the new Israeli government has been announced – and we are concerned about it. We need to see commitment for the two-state solution in the actions of the new government," he said. "Building in East Jerusalem is damaging and inconsistent with the commitment to the two-state solution." The criticism came in response to the Jerusalem District Planning and Building Committee's decision to go ahead with the construction. The plan gained recognition in 2010, when it was announced during a visit to Israel by United States Vice President Joe Biden, leading to a diplomatic crisis between the two countries. Though the plan was approved in November 2013, construction was put on hold until the completion of a new traffic interchange at the entrance to the neighborhood. (Haaretz 17 November 2015)

- Ex-minister, Former Israeli Officers Propose Plan to Unilaterally Divide Jerusalem. All sides slam a new plan calling to erect a fence and transfer civil control over the capital's Arab neighborhoods to the Palestinian Authority. Former minister Haim Ramon and the Peace and Security Association intend to present a new and unilateral plan for the division of Jerusalem this week. The plan is scheduled to be launched in a festive ceremony that includes the laying of what is supposed to be the symbolic cornerstone for the new fence that will divide Jerusalem and transfer most of its Arab neighborhoods to the Palestinian Authority. Even before the plan's official launch, it has drawn heavy criticism from both the Israeli right and left - and the Palestinians too. The plan, which was written by Col. (res.) Shaul Arieli, is based on the principles of a one-sided separation of most of the Arab neighborhoods of the city and transferring them to the PA with the status of "Area B," territory where the PA has full civil control and shares security responsibility with Israel. The new border under the proposal would leave the Old City and the "historic basin" - which includes large parts of the neighborhoods of Silwan, the Mount of Olives and other Arab neighborhoods - inside Israeli territory. The plan does not include removing settlers living inside Palestinian neighborhoods. The sponsors of the plan speak of the need to protect "Jewish Jerusalem," both demographically and also in security terms. The plan would gradually eliminate the residency rights inside Israel of the Palestinians from East Jerusalem, but they would still be allowed to continue to pass through the border fence and work in western Jerusalem. The crossing points and checkpoints that divide East and western Jerusalem today would remain open permanently, too. The plan would require the Knesset changing the Basic Law on Jerusalem, which would require a special majority of 71 Knesset members to pass. Even before the plan's official launch later this week, it has become a target for serious attacks. Adnan Ghaith, secretary of the Jerusalem branch of the Palestinian Fatah party and the head Tanzim in the city, said the plan will not receive the agreement of any official Palestinian body. If the agreement has "a state next to a state in the 1967 borders, then that is something different. But if it is in such a fashion, without al-Aqsa [mosque] and without Silwan, what does it give?" said Ghaith. The fact that the left offers it is even worse, it tells you there is no hope and when there is no hope we have seen what happens. No one can agree to such a thing, whoever agrees will be a collaborator," he added. Marik Shtern, a researcher at the Jerusalem Institute for Israel Studies, who recently wrote a study on Palestinian employment in the city, also rejects the proposal: "The Palestinians in the eastern part of the city view themselves as Jerusalemites and they are part of the urban framework, like Gilo and French Hill. The city of Jerusalem cannot exist today without the Arab population, and the ties woven here over the past 50 years are very hard to sever," said Shtern. Shtern estimates that at least half of the workforce in East Jerusalem, over 30,000 workers, are employed in the western half of the capital, or elsewhere in Israel. If the new fence makes it difficult for them to get to work, it will create a severe humanitarian crisis in East Jerusalem and a serious shortage of workers in entire industries in the city, such as hotels, industry, transportation, medicine and others, he said. Ramon rejects the criticism. "To correct historic mistakes is always difficult," he says. "The right objects to it because it wants a [unified] Jerusalem. The left objects because it worries about the Palestinians, and we will worry about what is good for Israel. It was a historic mistake to annex these neighborhoods of the city and we must correct this. The Palestinians who live there are not meant to be Israeli residents. They do not recognize our occupation, and it is also impossible not to recognize and to benefit from it. The basic law will be amended, the map will change and they will return to where they belong - and Jerusalem will be more logical, more Jewish and safer," said Ramon. The Commanders for Israel's Security organization, a non-partisan group of former senior officials in Mossad, IDF, police and Shin Bet security service, denied it had any involvement in the initiative. - PM approves marketing housing units beyond Green Line. Building of homes in Ramat Shlomo had been frozen, but Jerusalem municipality has demanded another 1,000 units. Fresh from a successful trip to Washington, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu on Monday approved the marketing of 436 housing units in the settlement of Ramat Shlomo, next to Shuafat in the north of East Jerusalem. The building of the units had already been approved in 2012, but had been frozen ever since, with Israel loath to create a diplomatic incident. A discussion on the matter was supposed to take place last week but was postponed due to Netanyahu's trip to the US. The ground to be marketed covers around a third of the settlement. Ramat Shlomo was previously the subject of a diplomatic dispute between the US and Israel, when building plans were announced during US Vice President Joe Biden's visit to Israel five years ago. Meanwhile, the Jerusalem municipality requested marketing of a further 1,000 housing units. A further 18 housing units in the Ramot neighborhood, also over the Green Line, will also be marketed. Chairman of the local council for building and planning in Jerusalem, Meir Turgeman, has contacted the Prime Minister, requesting that he push for approval of land development for the other 1,000 housing units in Ramat Shlomo, whose building plans have already been approved, but not yet their marketing. Last July, following the demolition of the Dreinof houses in Beir El, Netanyahu approved the immediate construction of 300 housing units in the settlement, whose construction was promised three years ago by Israel's government following the moving of the structures from Ulpana Hill. In addition, marketing and building has been approved for housing units in several Jerusalem Neighborhoods: Marketing 91 units in Pisgat Ze'ev, and planning 300 units in Ramot, 70 in Gilo, 24 in Pisgat Ze'ev, and 19 in Har Homa. While PM Netanyahu was visiting the United States last week, the Jerusalem Local Council debated a large 900-unit construction plan in Gilo, which is beyond the Green Line. The council approved the partition plans and gave the green light to go on with construction. The plan in question is the Mordot Gilo South plan, and includes 891 units on empty ground between Gilo and the Palestinian village of Beit Jala. The land on which the houses are set to be built is owned by several different people and bodies, among them Keren Kayemet Leyisrael and the Israel Land Authority, and thus a construction permit would require the unification of the separate land pieces and their redistribution. A similar case occurred in 2010, when Netanyahu went to the US and the local council approved building 32 housing units in eastern Pisgat Ze'ev, outside the Green Line. A memorably controversial moment occurred eight months before the approval of construction in Pisgat Ze'ev, when a 1,600 unit addition in the Ramat Shlomo neighborhood of Jerusalem was approved during a visit to Israel by American Vice President Joe Biden. - Israel Ignoring Construction of Two Unauthorized West Bank Roads, Including One on Palestinian Land. State says the two new roads have never been challenged in court, so there is no reason they cannot be built. The government is ignoring the construction of two new roads in the West Bank, one of them over private Palestinian land, which are meant to replace two other roads the Supreme Court ordered demolished. The state says the two new roads have never been challenged in court, so there is no reason they cannot be built. This week, the Supreme Court held a hearing on the road leading to the unauthorized outpost of Mitzpe Danny, as part of two different cases. The Yesh Din – Volunteers for Human Rights organization appealed to the court asking to demolish the road, which passes over privately owned Palestinian land, as well as a house in the outpost. In the second case, two private Palestinian petitioners have asked to demolish seven homes in the outpost. In response, the state says that the road was in fact built on private Palestinian land, but will be demolished by February 1, 2016. Attorney Shlomi Zachary, representing Yesh Din, told the court that instead of the existing road, a new road is being built and it also makes use of privately owned land. The government's response admitted to this fact, but said the new road is not part of the present case. Supreme Court Justice Elyakim Rubinstein accepted the state's claim and ruled that the issue of the new road was not part of the case, but it would be better to find an interim solution that would not use private land, "and in any case it was a clear justification for speeding up the planning, and the respondents should consider this," wrote Rubinstein. The other road is being built to connect the outpost of Haroeh near Eli with the nearby settlement of Ma'ale Levona. Here the land is of undetermined ownership, having the status of "survey land," for which no in-depth examination of the ownership has been conducted. This new road is meant to replace an existing one that the High Court of Justice ordered demolished because it too is partly on privately owned land. The court ordered this carried out by December 7. In its ruling almost a year ago, the court gave the government a year in order to build an alternative – but the state has done nothing to find a solution and the new road is being constructed without proper permits and planning. The IDF's Civil Administration in the West Bank will not take any action against this new road because the residents "need a road and there is nothing that can be done," an official in the Civil Administration told Haaretz. The council heads of two nearby Palestinian villages petitioned the High Court Wednesday against the building of the road, and the state is supposed to respond by Friday. The Civil Administration said the work on the new road was illegal and a stop-work order had been issued against it. (Haaretz 18 November 2015)

- Ministers Authorize West Bank Closures That IDF Was Already Conducting. Security cabinet decision grants military commanders power to put Palestinian villages under lockdown, but army source says the IDF never needed such authorization. The security cabinet has authorized the Israeli army to impose full closures on Palestinian villages in the West Bank while searching for suspected terrorists, a senior official in Jerusalem said Friday. However, it has emerged that the IDF hadn't needed such approval in the past. The cabinet decision taken on Thursday evening allows military commanders to decide whether to put a village under lockdown without waiting for approval from the government. But a military source confirmed that in effect, the tactical decision to put a village on lockdown is already made by military commanders on the ground. (Haaretz 27 November 2015)

- Jewish youths tell Palestinian farmers, ‘You’re all Dawabsha’. Teens from Yitzhar settlement seen on video threatening residents of nearby Madama village in northern West Bank. About a dozen Jewish teenage boys on Saturday shouted racist threats at Palestinian farmers in the northern West Bank in footage released by the Rabbis for Human Rights advocacy group on Sunday. The farmers were “all Abu Khdeir,” the youths yelled, in reference to an East Jerusalem Arab teenager brutally murdered by suspected Jewish terrorists in July 2014. The Abu Khdeir trial is ongoing and a main suspect is awaiting his verdict, which is expected Monday. In the video, 12 people can be seen walking in white Sabbath shirts on the side of a hill in the West Bank. Two of the people seem to be older than the rest. As the teens yell the slogans, the adults look on and do not try to stop them. According to the NGO, whose members are rabbis who do not use electronic devices on the Jewish Sabbath, the clip was filmed by an activist identified in a statement by his first name, Zakaria. The clip was filmed near the Palestinian village of Madama, adjacent to Route 60 and north of Yitzhar in the northern West Bank. The settlers can also be heard yelling “You are all Muhammad Dawabsha,” “Dawabsha 2” and “Go to Duma,” references to the terror attack in which three members of the Dawabsha family from the northern West Bank village of Duma were killed when their house was firebombed, allegedly by Jewish terrorists, in an attack that took place at the end of July. In a statement, Rabbis for Human Rights said the incident was “another testimony to the regrettable brainwashing of young people for hate and terrorism among the extremists from the settlements. When this is done on the Palestinian side we are outraged and justifiably so, and it is appropriate that those who are outraged will put their money where their mouth is. We hope this phenomenon will be officially condemned by settler leaders.” (Time of Israel 29 November 2015)
- Netanyahu advances Jewish nation-state bill. Team headed by coalition chairman is attempting to dismantle obstacles that may block the proposal, which would enshrine as a Basic Law the definition of Israel as the nation-state of the Jewish people; PM also advances legislation which would extend voting rights to Israelis abroad. Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, fresh from passing the 2015-2016 state budget, is now looking to advance coalition talks that will have dramatic political ramifications. The prime minister announced on Sunday that Coalition Chairman Tzachi Hanegbi will head up a team tasked with dismantling any potential obstacles to the passing of the Nationality Law. Additionally, the team will be responsible for formulating wording for the bill that will be acceptable to all branches of the coalition. In addition to Hanegbi, members of the committee will include Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked and MKs Yifat Shasha-Biton of Kulanu, Uri Maklev of United Torah Judaism and former minister Ariel Atias, who will represent Shas. The nation-state law is a source of considerable division in the government. A few weeks ago, Netanyahu decided to postpone its approval in the Ministerial Committee for Legislation until a team had been established to deal with the proposed law. Although Netanyahu has now decided to push ahead with the legislation, it is still unclear when the bill will be submitted to the coalition and what would be its wording. The first clause in the Nationality Law would enshrine as a Basic Law the concept that Israel is the nation-state of the Jewish people. The clause also sets out that all Israeli law must be interpreted according to this principle. This imperative has already been set out before in Israel, when it was mandated that Israeli law defer to the principles of human rights as enshrined in the Basic Law: Human Dignity and Liberty. The Basic Law also specifies some of the practical aspects of the State of Israel being the nation-state of the Jewish people. The law addresses state symbols (national anthem, flag, icons), Jerusalem as the capital, the language, the right of return, ingathering of the exiles, Jewish settlement, relations with the Jewish Diaspora, the Hebrew calendar and holy sites. There are fears that the law will provoke civil and political clashes, primarily due to the reactions of Arab Israelis and the fear of being depicted globally as a nationalist state that advances nationalist laws. "It is a sensitive law, because we don't want to hurt the Arab-Israeli public," said a senior coalition figure on Sunday. "We need to solve this in the coalition." "I have recently heard voices from public groups in the country against our decision to outlaw the Northern Branch of the Islamic Movement. This will not change our decision one millimeter," Netanyahu said at the opening of the weekly cabinet meeting on Sunday. "We stand by this decision just as we stand by passing the Nationality Law that will clearly set out Israel's being a Jewish and democratic state, the national state of the Jewish People. "Within this framework, the discussions that we promised to hold will start this week led by coalition chairman MK Tzachi Hanegbi. We are starting to advance the legislation of the Nationality Law," Netanyahu added. Netanyahu also appointed MK Yariv Levin (Likud) to deal with issues relating to changing the system of governance in Israel. Levin will head up coalition teams that will deal with these matters as well as with advancing the law for Israelis to vote from abroad. Currently, Israelis who live abroad can only vote if they are in Israel on election day. A proposal to allow Israelis abroad to participate in elections has been put forward in the past and over the years, various assessments throughout Israel's political system have shown that the majority of overseas voters fall within the right-wing camp. Statistics gathered in 2009 showed that 550,000 Israelis were living abroad at that time, not including children who were born outside Israel. Other proposals under plan to change the system of governance would be to remove the need for the president to declare who will form the government, and that the responsibility for formation would be imposed on the largest party. - Government Approves Extra Funding for Jerusalem but Not Through Municipality. Mayor Barkat backs down from anti-Kahlon campaign after finance minister approves assistance through Jerusalem Affairs Ministry. The cabinet approved a plan Sunday to strengthen businesses in Jerusalem by increasing funding to the city, through the Jerusalem Affairs Ministry and other bodies rather than through the Jerusalem municipality. At Sunday's cabinet meeting Mayor Nir Barkat apologized for a campaign he had launched against Finance Minister Moshe Kahlon before the plan was approved, and said he was ending his boycott of the Jerusalem affairs minister, Zeev Elkin. The aggressive campaign Barkat launched a few weeks ago slammed Kahlon for refusing to increase funding to the municipality. The campaign included numerous posters accusing Kahlon of abandoning the city. Barkat had also refused to cooperate with Elkin because he opposed the latter's appointment as Jerusalem affairs minister. Barkat said the ministry was only an obstacle to the municipality. In response to the campaign, the treasury began to approve assistance to the city, although it bypasses the municipality. However, on Sunday Barkat came to the cabinet meeting and said he welcomed the plan. "Jerusalem is above everything," the mayor said after the cabinet meeting. "I'm glad we decided to put political disputes aside and cooperate and do the best thing for Jerusalem". Officials in the municipality said the plan would not have been approved if Barkat had not mounted his campaign against the finance minister, and now the two sides can sit down to negotiate over increased funding for the city. In the official statement released by the ministries of finance, tourism and Jerusalem affairs, the municipality was not even mentioned. The additional funding will be channeled through the government ministries and the Jerusalem Development Authority, not through the municipality. "Today we are strengthening Jerusalem's citizens and small and medium-size businesses in the city in days that are not simple," Kahlon said. "And we say to you, we are all here for you ... With this decision we ensure that all the funding we transfer will go directly to the residents of Jerusalem and to the city's most essential needs". (Haaretz 30 November 2015)

- Israeli Prime minister Benjamin Netanyahu said that no plans to deliver land from Area C in the occupied West Bank to Palestinians, claiming the outraged Israeli ministers. According to Al Ray, in a meeting for Likud ministers on Sunday, Netanyahu stressed that there will be no transfer of land to the Palestinian Authority, "not 40 thousand dunams, not 10 thousand, not one meter," he said. On Sunday, the Israeli Cabinet demanded answers after reports surfaced that the Israeli Civil Administration, under orders from Netanyahu, was preparing to deliver 10,000 dunams (2,471 acres) of land from Area C in occupied West Bank to the PA as a confidence-building measure, as reported by Al Ray. The Yesha Council also strongly denounced the plan, accusing Netanyahu of giving "concessions" instead of attacking the PA and its leaders who "encourage terrorism." (PNN 30 November 2015)
