Other

- Israel Police using new anti-riot gear without training. Guidelines for use of black foam-tipped bullets appear to have been written about a month ago, even though police have gradually introduced bullets for about a year. The police appear to have been using new riot control weapons for more than six months without training their officers to operate them and without issuing regulations for their use, according to the Association for Civil Rights in Israel. The advocacy group is urging Attorney General Yehuda Weinstein to investigate the matter urgently. Regulations governing the use of black foam-tipped bullets, also known as Model 4557, appear to have been written about a month ago, even though police have been gradually introducing the new riot control ammunition for about a year, as Haaretz reported in September. The black bullets are heavier and cause more serious bodily harm than blue ones the police had used previously. Police are thought to have used black foam-tipped bullets when they shot Mohammed Sunuqrut of Jerusalem's Wadi Joz neighborhood in the head in late August. In response to requests from the Association for Civil Rights in Israel, the police sent the group a document dated January 1 that spells out regulations for operating a “40-mm. foam gun.” “Apparently the police have been using a new weapon with a higher potential for injury and killing, before drafting the required procedures regulating its use and the minimum permitted ranges,” Sucio said in a letter to Weinstein. “According to the date on the instructions for use, they were written only about six months after the new weapon was put into use and after many people had already been injured from it. If that is the case, the police conduct is evidently reprehensible and illegal.” But police said the January 1 guidelines are “merely a structural change to the original procedure and not a new one.” They said every weapon they use is “accompanied by procedure that is written and internalized before the weapon is operated, after it has been examined and authorized by professionals.” Meanwhile, six months after Sunuqrut’s death, the Justice Ministry’s internal affairs unit has still not decided whether to indict the police officer who shot him. The investigation has been completed and the officer has been conditionally released. The Sunuqrut family said they haven’t received the autopsy results or an update on where the case stands. Dozens of people have said they have seen people injured after being shot with foam-tipped bullets. Some of them were seriously injured, suffering sight loss, facial fractures or injury to internal organs. Foam-tipped bullets are fired one at a time with a specially designated projector, and are among the most prevalent riot control weapon within the Green Line. (Haaretz 5 February 2015)
