Expansion of settlements

- Israel to end freeze with hundreds of new settlement housing units. Subcommittee on settlements to discuss new housing units in Beit El, Ma'aleh Adumim, Givat Ze'ev, Beit Aryeh after a year without new construction. The subcommittee for settlements within the Israeli Civil Administration was expected to approve on Wednesday the construction of hundreds of housing units in the West Bank, ending a year-long unofficial freeze. The subcommittee's hearing will also deal with the two Dreinoff buildings in Beit El, after a Supreme Court ruling to demolish them by the end of the month led to wide-scale protest from settlers. Over the past week, settlers upped their rhetoric against

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu and Defense Minister Moshe Ya'alon, who they say gave the order to freeze construction in the West Bank. They sent a letter to Likud MKs with the headline "Netanyahu is suffocating the settlements and the Likud remains silent?" The settlers asserted that a decision in their favor at the subcommittee meeting will be an attempt by the defense minister to fix the strained relationship between the settlers and the prime minister. The freeze in settlement construction came to the fore last week when, according to settler leaders, Netanyahu told them: "We cannot develop the settlements further, but rather need to preserve what we have." The Likud party denied the comment attributed to Netanyahu, while the head of the Har Hebron regional council, Yochai Damari, said that "the ramifications of deciding to freeze settlement planning and building in Samaria will hurt many communities." The subcommittee is expected to approve, along with the Dreinoff buildings, some 296 homes to be built on land near Beit El currently housing a Border Police base that is to be vacated as part of the evacuation agreement of several buildings in the Ulpana neighborhood in 2012. The subcommittee will also discuss the construction of 112 housing units in Ma'aleh Adumim, 381 in Givat Ze'ev and 27 housing units in the settlement Beit Aryeh in the southwestern Samaria. The subcommittee will also receive requests to approve dozens of housing units that have already been built in Psagot, and 22 units in Giv'on HaHadasha. It will also receive plans for the development of the Karnei Shomron industrial area, the expansion of the "Makor Haim" yeshiva in Neve Daniel (where Gil-Ad Shaer and Naftali Frenkel studied), and converting land from an open private area to an area where public institutions and other structures can be built. Left-wing NGO Peace Now said in response, "It is a black day for the two-state vision. The settlers' threats have proven themselves once again and the government is once again accelerating construction across the territories and in isolated settlements. " (Ynetnews 22 July 2015)

Other

- New Israeli panel eyes legalizing West Bank outposts. Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked aims to let settlers living in outposts 'stop worrying about a constant threat to the ownership of their homes.' Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked established a committee Tuesday that might legalize West Bank outposts set up with the government's help. Among the tasks will be to classify which land is considered privately owned and what evidence of ownership is required to determine that an area is privately owned. In the West Bank there are many areas "whose status isn't clarified," Shaked said. "It's time to clear the legal fog and let residents who live in Judea and Samaria, most of them in communities set up by various Israeli governments, stop worrying about a constant threat to the ownership of their homes," she said. "The committee comprises land experts, jurists and directors general." The committee, which had been called for in the coalition agreement between Naftali Bennett's Habayit Hayehudi and Benjamin Netanyahu's Likud, will be headed by Cabinet Secretary Avichai Mendelblit. It will submit its conclusions in 60 days. According to Shaked, the panel will discuss "formulating an outline for regularizing structures and neighborhoods in Jewish communities in Judea and Samaria that were built with the involvement of the authorities." According to the coalition agreement, the panel would be set up within a month of the establishment of the new government. In addition to the cabinet secretary, it would include one representative each of the defense, agriculture and justice ministers. In addition to Mendelblit, the committee members will be the director general of the Agriculture Ministry, Shlomo Ben Eliyahu; the Defense Ministry's legal adviser, Ahaz Ben Ari; and Chagai Vinitzky of the Sha'arei Mishpat Academic Center, who will be Shaked's representative. In an usual move, Shaked chose someone from outside the Justice Ministry. (Haaretz 22 July 2015)
