Expansion of settlements

- Municipality approves construction of 200 housing units in Jerusalem. Despite international criticism, construction of 200 additional housing units was approved in a Jerusalem neighborhood adjacent to the Green Line. The housing units are to be built in Ramot, the capital's largest neighborhood at Jerusalem's northern edge, where 244 new housing units were approved only last week. The land on which Ramot was built was annexed by Israel after the Six-Day War, and is considered an Israeli settlement by the international community. The municipality explained the decision, saying construction in Jerusalem is necessary for enabling young people to live in the capital. In the beginning of the month the municipality approved the construction of 500 housing units in the North-Jerusalem neighborhood of Ramat Shlomo, on the other side of the Green Line. "Criticizing the decision is hypocritical, for the committee which approved the construction also approved Arab housing units in the same meeting", a municipality official stated.
