Other

- Knesset panel approves bill barring discrimination against settlements. Bill adds place of residence to race, gender, faith and other descriptors that cannot serve as basis for discrimination. The Ministerial Committee for Legislation approved Sunday a bill that would prohibit Israeli businesses from discriminating against customers based on where they live. The draft law is aimed mainly at companies that refuse to deliver goods to or provide services in Jewish settlements in the West Bank, but it would also apply to remote locales within the Green Line, including Arab communities. The bill adds place of residence to race, gender, faith and other descriptors that cannot serve as a basis for discrimination. It was passed in preliminary reading in the previous Knesset and will now go to the Knesset plenum for the final votes. The draft law was proposed by MK Shuli Moalem (Habayit Hayehudi) (Jewish Home).
