Israeli Settler Violence

- Israeli settlers attempted to take over a tract of land belonging to a Palestinian family in the occupied East Jerusalem neighborhood of Silwan, claiming that it had been owned by Yemenite Jews prior to the creation of the state of Israel. Rafaat Basbous, the owner of the land in the Batn al-Hawa area of Silwan, located just south of the Al-Aqsa Mosque in Jerusalem's Old City, said that 20 workers escorted by Israeli occupation Army (IOA) and settlers raided the land adjacent to his family's home and started delimiting the area with barbed wire. The settlers told Basbous that they had obtained a court order stating that the land belonged to Jews. The land was located in a five-dunam (1.23 acre) area that settler organization Ateret Cohanim had been planning to take over, claiming that six tracts of land in Batn al-Hawa had been owned by Yemenite Jews since 1881.
