- Activists, accompanied by Israeli and international supporters, are shutting down the recently opened Eastern Ring Road near Jerusalem, which features separate lanes for Palestinians and Israeli settlers, divided by a wall. A few dozen activists have closed the gates to the newly opened road, and are raising banners to protest apartheid and Israeli attempts to expand and cement control over the West Bank and Jerusalem. Two protesters have been detained and 4 protesters were injured. The road, which stretches between Road 437 and Road 1, inside the West Bank, features two separate lanes divided by a concrete wall – one for Israeli settlers and the other for Palestinians. While the Israeli lane allows settlers quick and easy access to the center of Jerusalem, the Palestinian lane is designed to separate Palestinians off through an underpass, so as to not disturb settler traffic into the city. The construction of the road is planned to continue to the south, further entrenching the two separate and unequal systems of transportation in the West Bank. This plan will enable Israeli authorities to block Palestinians commuting from the south of the West Bank to Ramallah from accessing Road 1, which leads to Jerusalem. By doing so, the Israeli checkpoint between the West Bank and Jerusalem, which bars Palestinians access to their capital, could be moved several miles to the east, past the Ma’ale Adumin, Mishor Adumim, and Kfar Adumim settlements, in effect annexing them to Jerusalem. - A Jerusalem municipality member advanced a suggestion to demolish the historic wall of Jerusalem’s Old City district, under the pretext of easing the traffic crisis. The wall was built in the 16th century, by one of the Ottoman caliphs, to protect Jerusalem from war, and it is no longer needed, as well as being the cause of a severe traffic crisis. The wall could not be considered sacred and historical; therefore, it can be fully or partially removed, in order to solve the traffic crisis. The walls of Jerusalem and the Old City were added, in 1981, to the UNESCO World Heritage Site. They were built during the reign of Ottoman Sultan Suleiman I, between 1535 and 1538. The walls surrounded the Old Town of 4,018 meters, with an average height of 12 meters and a thickness of 2.5 meters. Israeli occupation authorities used the walls to observe and to control the entry and exit of Palestinians through eight historic gates. (IMEMC 7 January 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) confiscated for the second time a caravan in Imreiha village in Ya’bad southwest of Jenin city. The confiscated caravan belongs to Hisma Hamdounah. (WAFA January 2018)

• Last week, the Sabagh family received a notice from the Execution Office stating that it had to vacate its home in Kerem Ja’ouni in Sheikh Jarrah until January 23. If the family does not vacate the house by then, it will face eviction by force. The eviction lawsuit against the Sabagh family was filed by a company called “Nahalat Shimon”, which represents settlers seeking to build a large settlement in Sheikh Jarrah. The settlers purchased the land from two Jewish associations, the Sephardi Community Committee and the Knesset Israel Committee, which in turn claimed to have purchased the land at the end of the 19th century. In 1948 the land, which was then without structures, was transferred to the Jordanian rule. The Jordanians designated the land for the resettlement of dozens of Palestinian refugee families who exchanged their refugee statues for homes in the newly-built neighborhood in Sheikh Jarrah. After 1967, the Jewish organizations recovered the ownership rights on the land and began to demand that the refugee families vacate their homes. To that extent, the associations were exercising the “right of return” of Jews to assets taken in 1948 (a right not afforded to Palestinians). Peace Now: “This is part of an organized and systematic campaign of settlers, with the assistance of government agencies, to expel entire communities in East Jerusalem and to establish settlements in their stead. Dozens of other families face the risk of eviction by legal proceedings in which settlers and government officials exploit discriminatory laws that allow Jews to return to pre-1948 assets yet forbid Palestinians from doing the same. In this way, settlers seek to create a buffer inside the Palestinian neighborhood and make it difficult to reach a territorial compromise in Jerusalem so essential to a two-state solution.” In recent years, the Nahalat Shimon settler company has filed numerous lawsuits against dozens of families in Sheikh Jarrah in the Kerem Ja‘ouni area, and are in various stages of court hearings. The settlement of Kerem Ja‘ouni began in 2008 when the Al Kurd family was evicted from its home, and in 2009 the Rawi, Hanoun and part of al-Kurd families. Since then there have been no evacuations in the neighborhood. Apart from the Sabagh family, Peace Now is aware of at least ten additional eviction cases dealing with dozens of families of hundreds of people which are in various stages of court hearings. Recently, the lawyers of the Palestinian families obtained documents from Turkey that undermine the original ownership of the Jewish associations and appear to show that the land purchased at the end of the 19th century was in another area, not in Kerem Ja‘oni. The Magistrate’s Court and District Court refused to discuss the new documents on the grounds of Statute of Limitation. On 13 November 2018, a hearing was held in the Supreme Court on the appeal of the Sabagh family together with another family demanding that they be allowed to submit the documents and to argue the issue of ownership, but the Supreme Court rejected the appeal. Today, 10 January, 2019, Chief Justice Esther Hayut rejected the request submitted by the families to hold another hearing on the matter, thus paving the way for the evacuation of the Sabagh family. The house of the Sabagh family was built in the 1950s by the Jordanian Housing Ministry as part of a refugee rehabilitation project in which 30 houses were constructed in Sheikh Jarrah for refugee families in return for waiving their status as refugees. It should be noted that the process of registering the houses in the names of the refugees was not completed before 1967. After the area was transferred to Israeli control in the 1967 war, the Jewish associations could take advantage of the lack of registration and registered the land in their name based on the Legal and Administrative Matters Law (1970). In 1970, the Legal and Administrative Matters Law was enacted in Israel, which stipulated, among other things, that Jews who lost their property in East Jerusalem in 1948 could receive it back to their ownership. It is important to mention that Israeli law (the Absentee Property Law of 1950) does not allow Palestinians who lost their assets in Israel in 1948 to receive them back, and permits the state to bring the assets into the state’s possession. Thus, without saying so explicitly, Israeli law provides for a different law for Jews and Palestinians. In certain cases, the implementation of the law leads to the evacuation of Palestinian refugees from their homes, and in effect makes them refugees for the second time. Moreover, the government of Israel made sure to compensate all the Jews who lost their property in 1948 and gave them alternative assets inside Israel. Hence the owners of the properties are entitled under the Legal and Administrative Matters Law to double compensation for the loss in 1948. The Sabagh family had a house in Jaffa before 1948, and land in the Yavne and Ashdod areas, but as a result of the war became refugees. According to the Absentee Property Law (1950), they are not entitled to receive or return to their property. In the 1950s, the family attempted to rehabilitate themselves and in exchange for giving up their status as a refugee family. Today, on the basis of the discriminatory law enacted by the Knesset, the family is about to become refugees again, without any justice, where where all that has changed is the geopolitical situation and the law enacted by Israel. “We have properties in Jaffa, Yavneh and Ashdod, why can’t I ask for my property?” Said Muhammad Sabagh, one of the brothers who lives in the house. (PEACENOW 11 January 2018)

- A Palestinian family in the Sheikh Jarrah neighborhood of occupied East Jerusalem received an order, from the Israeli authority’s Law Enforcement Department, to evacuate a building it owns, and where five Palestinian families live, by January 23rd. The building would be turned over to Israeli settlers who had claimed ownership of the building. In 2012, the Sabbagh family had filed a law suit, at the Israeli District Court in Jerusalem, against Israeli settlers’ claim that they own the land in question. The Sabbagh family had provided the court with evidence proving ownership of the land and that Israeli settlers’ land registration process, done in 1972, was illegal and improper; therefore, their claim of ownership was null and void. The court nevertheless ruled in favor of the settlers on their claim that the statute of action has expired. The family, through its lawyers, appealed the ruling to the High Court, on November 15, 2018, which rejected the appeal and upheld the District Court’s decision. The Sabbaghs’ home is in Sheikh Jarrah houses 45 people. (IMEMC 12 January 2019)

- In related West Bank news, Israeli occupation Army (IOA) forced 13 Palestinian families to evacuate from their homes in northern Tubas, in order to make way for active military training. The IOA stormed Khirbet Ibziq, in the Tubas Governorate, and forced 13 families to evacuate their homes for the next 24 hours, for military training in the area. (IMEMC 12 January 2019)

- Israeli occupation Army (IOA) invaded Beit Iksa village, northwest of occupied East Jerusalem, and demolished agricultural sheds and structures, owned by two siblings. The IOA surrounded the entire area of the properties, and preventing the Palestinians from entering or leaving it. The IOA demolished a hothouse, and several agricultural structures, owned by Haitham and Ibrahim Abdul-Wahab, under the allegation of being built without permits. (IMEMC 13 January 2019)

- The Supreme Court refused Thursday to rehear the case of a Palestinian family facing eviction from its East Jerusalem home in favor of Jewish settlers. The Sabbagh family, numbering some 40 people, has been ordered to leave its home in the Sheikh Jarrah neighborhood by January 23. The court had previously upheld the eviction, but the family had asked it to rehear the case with an expanded panel of justices. The Sabbaghs are refugees from Jaffa, where their original family home still stands. But under Israeli law, Palestinians — unlike Jews — cannot reclaim property abandoned during the 1948 Israeli War of Independence. Since 1956, the Sabbaghs have lived in Sheikh Jarrah, in a building built on land owned by Jews prior to 1948. In 2003, a company called Nahalat Shimon, which is registered overseas, bought the land from its original Jewish owners. The company’s Israeli representative, veteran settler activist Tzahi Mamo, then began proceedings to evict the Palestinian residents. In 2009, the company managed to evict three Palestinian families from the neighborhood, but this sparked international protests, as well as ongoing weekly protests in the neighborhood. The protests halted further evictions for a time, but about six months ago, another family was evicted. The Sabbaghs have been fighting eviction proceedings since 2008. In November, the Supreme Court rejected their final appeal, which sought to reopen the question of whether the original Jewish owners actually owned the land, based on documents the Sabbaghs’ lawyer obtained from Ottoman archives in Turkey. Justices Daphne Barak-Erez, Yael Willner and Alex Stein refused to even discuss the substance of this claim, saying it was made too belatedly, given that the land was registered in Nahalat Shimon’s name 15 years ago. The Sabbaghs then asked Supreme Court President Esther Hayut to rehear the case, including the land ownership issue, with an expanded panel of justices. But on Thursday, Hayut turned down this request, saying the original ruling contained no legal innovation or anything else that would justify a rehearing. Hayut’s decision is expected to pave the way not just for the Sabbaghs’ eviction, but also for the eviction of many other families in the neighborhood. The Sabbaghs were thought to have the best chance of winning a court case, given the documents they had obtained. Once again, families from Sheikh Jarrah are facing eviction and a second refugeehood,” said the family’s lawyer, Sami Ersheid. “In Israeli courts, which refrain from hearing the residents’ just and substantive arguments, people are sentenced to refugeehood on procedural grounds.” The eviction is “the first practical result of the Supreme Court’s decisions, which have effectively allowed Sheikh Jarrah and Silwan’s Batan al-Hawa to be emptied of its residents,” added Eyal Raz, a left-wing activist who has been helping the Sabbaghs, referring to another East Jerusalem neighborhood. “This is move with enormously destructive ramifications, which should and still can be stopped.” (Haaretz 13 January 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Yatta town, south of the southern West Bank city of Hebron, and ordered two families to halt the construction of their home, shed and water well. The IOA invaded the al-Jawaya village, east of Yatta, and handed the orders to Abdul-Mottaleb Hammad Nawaj’a and Mousa Hasan Shawaheen. The properties in question are being built on private Palestinian lands, but the military has been denying the residents the right to build on their property. (IMEMC 14 January 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) ordered a halt on the construction of Palestinian structures in the Masafer Yatta area in the southern occupied West Bank Governorate of Hebron. The IOA delivered a stop-construction notice to local Saddam al-Nawajaa for his house, and three other notices to members of the al-Shawahin family; a demolition notice for a water well, another demolition notice for a steel structure used for housing sheep and a stop-construction notice for a room in which the family resides. The structures were identified as belonging to Abed al-Muttaleb Nawajaa and Moussa Hassan al-Shawahin. (Maannews 14 January 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) raided the family home of a Palestinian detainee from the southern West Bank town of Yatta, south of Hebron, in preparation to demolish it. The IOA raided the family house of Khalil Jabarin, 17, and took footage of it, in preparation for demolition. On December 16, the IOA notified the family about their intention to punitively demolish their apartment, located in the third floor of a residential building in Yatta, and allowed them a grace period until January 2nd, 2019, to appeal the demolition order. The IOA had already prepared the house for demolition approximately three months ago, creating holes or cracks in the walls to plant explosives. The Jabarin family had appealed the court’s ruling to demolish the house, however, their appeal was dismissed. (Maannews 17 January 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) and bulldozers demolished a Palestinian home, in the Jordan Valley in the northern occupied West Bank. The IOA demolished a house in the Fasayel area of the Jordan Valley. The house belongs to local Adnan Abu Kharbish, and consists of three bedrooms, a kitchen and facilities. Abu Kharbish’s house was demolished under the pretext that it was built without the nearly-impossible to obtain Israeli permit. (Maannews 17 January 2019)

- The Israeli occupation Army (IOA) demolished ten Palestinian homes in the occupied Jordan Valley and left several Palestinians homeless, including women and children. (IMEMC 18 January 2019)

- The Israeli occupation authorities’ plans to destroy a 1,200-year-old archaeological site in an Arab town to the north of occupied Jerusalem, as a means to build a logistic center for the “Modi’in” settlement. (IMEMC 18 January 2019)

- Dozens of Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded the city of Yatta, south of the southern West Bank city of Hebron, and detonated the interior walls of the third floor of his family home. The IOA invaded Yatta after midnight, and surrounded Roq’a area, before storming the family home of a wounded and imprisoned Palestinian teen, identified as Khalil Yousef Jabarin, 17. The IOA forced the family out of their property, before wiring and detonating the interior walls of the third flood, rendering its useless and unsafe. (IMEMC 19 January 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) blew up the family home of an injured Palestinian prisoner. The IOA raided the Ruqaa area in Yatta City in the southern occupied West Bank Governorate of Hebron, and demolished the family home of Khalil Youssef Jabbarin, 17, using explosives. The IOA raided Jabbarin’s home, forced residents to evacuate the 3-floor house before blowing up the third floor of the house. The family had received a demolition order in December, 2018, allowing them until January 2nd to appeal the order. (Maannews 19 January 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Kobar town, northwest of the central West Bank city of Ramallah, and handed the family of a slain son, and his detained brother, a military order for the demolition of their home. The IOA invaded Kobar after surrounding it, and stormed the home of the imprisoned Omar Barghouthi, 66, the father of Saleh Barghouthi, who was assassinated by the army on December 12, 2018, and Assem Barghouthi, who was abducted by the soldiers on December 8th, 2018, along with his father. It is worth mentioning that Omar Barghouthi received a six-month Administrative Detention order, without charges or trial. The army claimed Saleh was allegedly “involved” in a shooting targeting colonialist settlers, in December of last year. (IMEMC 20 January 2019)

The Israeli army and the City Council in the occupied city have issued orders for the demolition of the home of the Palestinian, identified as Husam al-Abbassi. Al-Abbassi was informed that he must demolish his home within 14 days, or the city will destroy the property, and force him to pay more than 80,000 Shekels, in addition to other expenses, including the cost of the work, the and the workers. The home was only 65-70 square/meters, consisting of a bedroom room, one living room, a bathroom and a kitchen. (IMEMC 2 March 2019)

• The Jerusalem Planning and Building Committee turned down some 20 applications for residential building permits submitted by Palestinians, rejecting a long-standing procedure for establishing land ownership in East Jerusalem. Representatives of right-wing parties and the secular Hitorerut ticket on the city’s zoning board voted against the building plans, while members of the ultra-Orthodox parties voted in favor. The significance of the decision goes beyond the rejection of these particular plans. In the long run, it rules out almost any future Palestinian construction in East Jerusalem. About 330,000 residents of East Jerusalem face a serious housing shortage due to years of neglect of Palestinian neighborhoods, including the lack of any zoning plans and infrastructure in these areas. One of the most difficult obstacles to Palestinian construction in Jerusalem is the fact that ownership of about 90 percent of land in the eastern part of the city is not listed in the Israel Land Registry. Consequently, Palestinian residents cannot prove property ownership and therefore they cannot submit applications for construction permits. The problem has been dealt with in past decades with the “mukhtar protocol.” Anyone wanting to build on their land must collect signatures of consent from mukhtars, local leaders or clan heads recognized by the city hall. Nir Barkat, the former mayor, upgraded this system by adding to the pool of local leaders city officials whose signatures could be recognized for this purpose. Right-wing members of the city council, led by Aryeh King and Yehonatan Yosef, have campaigned against the system for a year, accusing local Arab leaders of being corrupt and of building without permits. In a marathon session last week, the Jerusalem Planning and Building Committee approved dozens of building plans that had been stalled during the campaign for October’s local elections and the municipal coalition talks that followed. But it turned down around 20 plans whose permit applications relied on the mukhtar protocol. While the local committee’s decision must be approved by the district committee to take effect, the development suggests the established method for determining land ownership is living on borrowed time. “The claims were that the system had become a tool for corruption,” Elad Malka, the zoning board member from Hitorerut, told Haaretz. Committee chairman Eliezer Rauchberger, from the Haredi party Degel Hatorah, said he voted in favor of keeping the mukhtar protocol because “it’s a good solution” to a problem. Mohammed Abu Ghanem, an architect whose plan for 12 homes in Silwan was rejected, called the decision a “catastrophe.” He said “we have no other ownership documents to present, and 90 percent of the land is not registered.” “It’s too bad that committee members want to deny Palestinians in any way possible the possibility of living securely on their land,” said Laura Wharton, a U.S.-born city councilwoman who heads the local Meretz party. “The new ‘mukhtar protocol’ has been developed together with the Justice Ministry to enable East Jerusalem residents to arrange land ownership and receive building permits. The city engineer recommended approval [of the plans] and those who opposed provided no rationale for rejecting his view. “It is sad to see elected officials taking advantage of their power to advance a political agenda, in this case, an ultranationalist one, at the expense of city residents seeking permits for plans that city professionals had already approved,” Wharton said. (Haaretz 3 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded the village of Beit Ta’mir, southeast of Bethlehem in the occupied West Bank, and handed the family of Nayef Hasan Zawahra an order for the demolition of their home. The home is a 100 square/meters one-story building, providing shelter for ten family members, and first received a demolition order in June of 2018. The army is alleging that the property, in the Palestinian village, was built without a permit from the Israeli “Civil Administration Office,” the administrative and executive branch of the illegal military occupation of Palestine. The home is located near the Tahadi 5 School, which is also subject to constant invasions and violations, under the same Israeli allegations. (IMEMC 3 March 2019)

- Israeli bulldozers demolished a Palestinian-owned car wash in the Beit Safafa neighborhood, in occupied East Jerusalem. The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) stormed the neighborhood and completely demolished the car wash under the pretext that it was built without the nearly-impossible to obtain Israeli permit. (Maannews 3 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) and bulldozers demolished a Palestinian-owned car wash, two steel structures and a vendor cart in Haris village in the northern occupied West Bank Governorate of Salfit. The Israeli bulldozers demolished a car wash Owner Fadi Salman, and two other steel structures and vendor cart owned by Hasan Saleh Suleiman. Israeli bulldozers also razed a half-a-dunam piece of cemented land in the western side of the village. (Maannews 4 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) shot dead two Palestinians and a third was lightly injured, at the entrance of Kafr Naama village, near the West Bank city of Ramallah. The army claims that two soldiers were wounded in a pre-dawn car-ramming attack in the northern West Bank, saying that forces opened fire on the three occupants of the vehicle, killing two and wounding the third. The two slain Palestinians were identified as Amir Darraj (20), from the village of Kharbatha al-Mesbah, and Yusuf ‘Anqawi (20), from the village of Beit Sira. The IOA closed Beit El (DCO) Israeli military checkpoint, near the northern entrance of al-Bireh city, to Palestinian traffic leaving the city of Ramallah, following confrontations that broke out to condemn the killing. The Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said that he will “speed up the demolition of the houses of the two youths,” whom he called “murderers”. (IMEMC 5 March 2019)

- Israeli settlers seized a Palestinian home belonging to the al-Halabi family, in the Old City of occupied East Jerusalem. Israeli settlers raided the al-Halabi family home, where an elderly Palestinian couple lives and who were out shopping for groceries, at the time; the couple was thrown out by settlers upon arrival. Palestinian youngsters attempted to defend the home from seizure, however, Israeli police assaulted them and fired tear-gas bombs in their direction. The Israeli Police detained five of the youth. Their identity remained unknown. Additionally, the settlers who seized the home pepper sprayed Palestinian residents and students, resulting in a number of severe suffocation cases. The home is located in a Palestinian-owned building which is divided into four ownerships. Two belong to the al-Alami family, the third belongs to the Eshteiyeh family, and the fourth belongs to the al-Halabi family (amounting up to 40%) and measures 100-square-meters. (IMEMC 5 March 2019)

- The Israeli occupation authorities, issued a court order against the Maragha family, demanding the land on which they built their residential building, located in Batn Al Hawa neighborhood in Silwan town, in occupied Jerusalem. The Ateret Cohnim company, a Jewish company aiming to ethnically cleanse Palestinians in Jerusalem, had handed over judicial orders to nine members of the Maragha family carrying their names, saying they must evacuate the land on which they built their residential building consisting of five apartments and parking for vehicles. The building is inhabited by 15 family members. The Maragha family have been living in the building for more than 100 years, and that they have all the supporting documents confirming their ownership of land and real estate. The Maragha family building is part of the “Ateret Cohnim” plan to control five dunams and 200 square meters of the central part of Batin Al-Hawa neighbourhood, under the pretext of its ownership by Jews from Yemen, since 1881. The Israeli Supreme Court approved the ownership, of the settlers from Yemen, to the land. The eviction also threatens 30-35 residential buildings in the area, where about 80 families (436 people) live, even though the entire population has lived in the neighborhood for decades, after the purchase of land and property from their former owners with official papers. (IMEMC 5 March 2019)

- The Israeli authorities issued warrants against the Maraga family, demanding that they evict their property in Baten Al-Hawa neighborhood in the East Jerusalem neighborhood of Silwan. The Ateret Cohanim Jewish settler group handed the Maraga family nine judicial warrants, ordering them to evict their five-apartment residential building and hand the plot of land on which they live to the settlers’ group. The judicial notices were handed to Hmeidan, Izziya, Salah, Fadwa, Munira, Na’im, Rabi’a, In’am and Itaf Maraga. A total of 15 Palestinians would be displaced as a result of the imminent eviction. The Maragha family noted that they have been living on these premises for more than 100 years, and that they have all the supporting documents confirming their ownership of the land and the real estate. The Ateret Cohanim seeks to take over the Maraga’s property as part of a larger plan to seize 5,200-square-meter of land in the heart of Silwan, where several dozen right-wing Jewish settlers live among more than 40,000 Palestinians. (WAFA 5 March 2019)

- The Israeli occupation Army (IOA) invaded, a neighborhood in Hebron city, in the southern part of the occupied West Bank, and handed orders for the demolition of two apartments, located in a five-story building, and owned by a detainee and his family. The IOA handed the family two orders from the demolition of their apartments, one of them is 150 square/meters located on the fourth floor, and the second with the same size but located in the second floor. The two apartments are owned by a detainee, identified as Atiya Erfa’eyya, 27, and his parents, and the family was ordered to demolish them by March 11. Erfa’eyya was taken prisoner a month ago. (IMEMC 6 March 2019)

- Dozens of Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Kobar village, north of the central West Bank city of Ramallah, and demolished a two storey home owned an imprisoned father, who was detained with his son in December of 2018, and is also the father a young man, who was killed by the army on December 12th, 2018. Many army jeeps surrounded the village before invading it accompanied by armored military bulldozers. The IOA demolished the home of Omar Barghouthi, who is imprisoned by Israel, after forcing the family out, and opened fire at many Palestinian protesters. (IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded the village of Burqa, north of the northern West Bank city of Nablus, and demolished a two-story home. The IOA accompanied by bulldozers, invaded the al-Mas’udiyya area in Burqa village, and demolished the home of Moshir Suleiman Saif. The IOA demolished the home “for being built without a permit, in Area C” of the occupied West Bank. the owner did not receive a prior notice for the demolition of his property. (IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) handed demolition orders targeting four greenhouses, used by Palestinian farmers in Shoshahla village, in the al-Khader town, south of Bethlehem. The properties targeted with the demolition orders are owned by Ali Mahmoud Salah, Monther Salah, Mousa Ahmad Salah and Habbas Khalil Salah. The army claimed the properties were built without a permit from the “Civil Administration Office,” the administrative branch of Israel’s illegal occupation in the West Bank. (IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) demolished several housing structures in Masafer Yatta in southern Hebron in the southern occupied West Bank. The IOA raided several areas in Masafer Yatta and demolished two housing structures belonging to Ismail al-Adra and Issa Abu Arram. Israeli forces also confiscated several tents belonging to Palestinian in the area, leaving several families homeless. (Maannews, IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) delivered a demolition order, to the home of Ayman Rizq Zreineh, in the Bir Ouna area of the city of Beit Jala, in the southern West Bank. The IOA ordered the two-story home of Ayman and his 3 sons Rizq, Muhammad, and Saleh Zreineh, be destroyed. The IOA ordered Ayman to demolish the home himself, and despite the IOA holding him, he refused to sign the self-demolition order. As a result, the family was forced to pay 230,000 Israeli shekels ($63,575) as bail, and, if Israel demolishes the home, Israel will force the family to pay for the demolition as well as additional fines. The reason for the demolition order was not stated, however, Israel so rarely awards Palestinians permits to build in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem. (IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- Israeli occupation authorities handed orders regarding the impending demolition of tents and animal barns in the village of Rashaydeh, east of Bethlehem in the occupied West Bank. Israeli army force accompanied by staff from the Israeli Civil Administration broke into the village and handed notices ordering the demolition of five tents and animal barns for the alleged reason of construction without a permit. The army also confiscated a lorry containing mobile bathrooms serving the village’s Palestinian citizens. Israel uses the pretext of building without a permit to carry out demolitions of Palestinian-owned homes on a regular basis. (WAFA 7 March 2019)

- The house of Mazen Eweda, a Palestinian citizen of the occupied East Jerusalem neighborhood of Silwan, is facing an imminent threat of collapse as a result of ongoing excavations beneath his house and neighborhood by Israeli authorities and illegal settlers organizations. The house sustained serious damages during the recent low pressure and the accompanying heavy rainfall and that cracks can be seen across his house. A landslide occurred in the floor of the house as a result of the excavations. (WAFA 8 March 2019)

- After being pressured from the West Jerusalem Israeli municipality to demolish their own homes or pay exorbitant fees if the municipality crews demolish them, two Palestinian families started since last night tearing down their homes. The Jaabis family in Jabal al-Mukabber, a neighborhood in occupied East Jerusalem, started the demolition after it received an order from the Israeli municipality for its demolition under the pretext of construction without permit. At the same time, the Alyout family in Silwan, another East Jerusalem neighborhood, proceeded with the demolition from last night, also after receiving a demolition order for construction without a permit. Homeowner, Atallah Alyout, stated that his 80-square meter house was built eight years ago to accommodate his new family, which currently adds up to seven people including five children. Alyout tried all these years to get a building permit and has paid around $30,000 in fees and fines but instead received a demolition order and told that if he does not tear down his house himself the municipality would do it for him and force him to pay high costs. (WAFA 9 March 2019)

- Fifteen Palestinians were made homeless after they demolished their own homes under Israeli orders. Eight members of one family, and seven members of another, had to participate in their own home demolition, or face steep fines or jail time from Israeli government forces. The Jaabis family, in Jabal al-Mukabber neighborhood of East Jerusalem, was ordered by the Israeli government to destroy their own home, or else the Israeli military would come and destroy it, and charge the family for the destruction. According to Israeli authorities, the family “lacked a permit” for the home — but Israeli government forces have not issued permits for Palestinian homes in Jerusalem since 1967. In the second case, a Palestinian family from Silwan neighborhood in East Jerusalem was forced to demolish their home. Atallah Eleiwat said he had constructed his home on land that he owned eight years ago, and has tried every avenue to get a permit from Israeli authorities, but has been denied at every attempt. (IMEMC 10 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded a Palestinian land near the al-‘Arroub refugee camp, north of the southern West Bank city of Hebron, uprooted dozens of trees, and demolished a chicken coop. The IOA, and employees of the so-called “Civil Administration Office,” invaded Abu Souda area, on the Hebron-Jerusalem road, right near the refugee camp. The IOA then uprooted dozens of trees, and demolished a 600 square/meters chicken coop, owned by a Palestinian, identified as Khaled Mohammad Samheen. (IMEMC 10 March 2019)

- The Israeli municipality ordered 2 Palestinian families to demolish their own homes – one in the Jabal al-Mukabbir neighborhood, and the other in Silwan neighborhood, both in occupied East Jerusalem. Ali Jaabis, one of the 8 members of the Palestinian family, from Jabal al-Mukabbir, newly homeless, described Israel’s threats of fines, and demolition costs if they did not demolish it themselves. Ali Jaabis had been trying to obtain a permit for several months, adding that they already paid the fine for building without a permit. Israel enforces home demolition under the pretext that the homes are built without a permit, a permit which is next to impossible for Palestinians to obtain from the Israeli authorities. Atallah Eleiwat, also demolished his own home in Silwan, where their family of 7 lived. Eleiwat has been unable to obtain a license, after 8 years of trying. (IMEMC 11 March 2019)

- A Palestinian family from occupied East Jerusalem was notified that their home will be awarded to Israeli settlers. An Israeli court informed Mariam Abu Zuweir that she and her children must leave their home by March 31, 2019. Nihad Siam, the owner of the home of Mariam Abu Zuweir, living there with her four children, has been contending with Israeli courts for more than 22 years to maintain ownership of her inherited home. The eviction notice was issued after a petition from El Ad group, an Israeli establishment that advocates for construction of illegal Jewish-only colonies in East Jerusalem. (IMEMC 12 March 2019)

- The Israeli occupation authorities (IOA) delivered stop-construction notices for four Palestinian structures in the Haris village in western Salfit in the northern occupied West Bank, under the pretext that they were built in areas classified as B and C. The IOA raided the village and delivered stop-construction notices to two houses, one that is still under construction and another that is inhabited, in addition to a yard that includes a carpenter's workshop, two rooms, a bathroom and a wall. The structures belong to locals Tareq Daoud, Ramez Shamlawi, Rani Daoud and Amjad Daoud, and are located in areas B and C. Owner of the threatened yard, Ramez Shamlawi, said that his yard includes a carpenter’s a shop and a 70-square-meter building, and a 400-meter tall wall that were built since 2017. (Maannews 12 March 2019)
• Israeli bulldozers demolished two Palestinian-owned homes, in the al-Qubbeh area, near Israel’s illegal separation wall, south of the central occupied West Bank district of Jerusalem. Iyad and Adi Edeis, the owners of the two demolished homes, said that staff from the Israeli Civil Administration along with bulldozers stormed the area and demolished the two homes. The owners said that Israeli authorities did not notify them prior to the demolition. The owners mentioned that the two homes were built several years ago and that 10 family members lived there. (Maannews 13 March 2019)

• Israeli bulldozers demolished two Palestinian-owned homes in the area of al-Qubbeh, to the south of Jerusalem. Staff from the so-called Israeli “Civil Administration” escorted a bulldozer into the area and demolished the two homes without a prior notice. The homes were constructed several years ago, but he and his brother carried out restoration works. As a result, two families with 10 members were displaced and became homeless. Using the pretext of illegal building, Israel demolishes houses on a regular basis, to restrict Palestinian expansion in occupied Jerusalem. (IMEMC 14 March 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded the city of Beit Jala, west of Bethlehem in the occupied West Bank, and demolished a barn and an agricultural shed. The IOA invaded Wadi al-Makhrour area, west of Beit Jala, and demolished a 120 square/meter barn, in addition to an agricultural shed. The demolished structures are owned by a Palestinian farmer, identified as Bassem Zeit, and were built nearly two years ago on his own land. (IMEMC 14 March 2019)

• Israeli authorities delivered demolition orders to two Palestinian-owned homes in Duma village, south of the northern occupied West Bank Governorate of Nablus. Israeli authorities formally delivered demolition orders to two family homes, in Duma village, within a week. Owners of the two homes are from Jerusalem City, in the central West Bank, however, no names were issued on the demolition orders. The orders mentioned that in less than a week, the demolition would be carried out. (Maannews 14 March 2019)
• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) razed and leveled the debris of a Palestinian elementary school in the al-Simiya village in the southern occupied West Bank Governorate of Hebron. Israeli forces also took down the al-Tahaddi 13 School sign and sealed off the road leading to the school with dirt mounds. The school, that is made up of mobile class rooms, was built by the Palestinian Ministry of Education late 2018, at a cost of €40,000, and was scheduled to open December before being demolished by Israel. Head of the Directorate of Education in Hebron, Khalid Abu Sharar, said that Israeli military bulldozers raided the school area and carried out the razing and leveled what is left of the school to the ground. Abu Sharar condemned the assault against the school, pointing out that it would not stop the Ministry of Education from rebuilding the school. The al-Tahaddi 13 School consists of seven classrooms, and serves 50 students. (Maannews 15 March 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Khirbat Um Neer village, east of Yatta town, in the southern West Bank governorate of Hebron, and demolished a water well allegedly for being dug without a permit. The Palestinian who owned the well, identified as Farid Ahmad Jabour, used it to collect rain water for his home and farmland, amidst frequent water shortages in the area. The well is near the Susya settlement. (IMEMC 18 March 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) issued demolition orders targeting a number of inhabited and under-construction homes in Khallet al-Nahleh and Khallet al-Qotin areas, southeast of Bethlehem, in the occupied West Bank. A large military force invaded the two areas and handed the demolition orders to the families. The orders targeted seven homes, some are inhabited, and some are still under-construction. Owners of two of the homes have been identified as Ahmad Ismael Mezher and Mohammad Yahia Ayyash. (IMEMC 18 March 2019)

• Israeli bulldozers, demolished an under-construction building belonging to a Palestinian school in the Shu’fat refugee camp of occupied East Jerusalem. Dozens of Israeli occupation Army (IOA) escorted bulldozers into the refugee camp, surrounded the al-Razi School and went up rooftops of nearby buildings as drones flew overhead; Israeli bulldozers then began to demolish the school’s building. The IOA Fire rubber-coated steel bullets towards locals in the refugee camp. Muhammad Alqam, owner of the school building, said that Israeli authorities had issued a demolition order against the building last November, pointing out that he had headed to the Israeli Jerusalem Municipality, before the construction of the building, to issue necessary permits. However, he was told that the area belongs to the United Nations Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNRWA.) Principal of the school, Saleh Alqam, pointed out that the demolition was carried out without prior notice. 400 Palestinian students had registered for the 2019/2020 school year in the new building, which was supposed to serve kindergarten and elementary students. However, after the demolition, these students now have no place to go. (IMEMC 20 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) demolished two Palestinian homes in the South Hebron Hills of the occupied West Bank city of Hebron. The IOA demolished a residential room belonging to local resident Issa Awad, in the Umm Tuba village, and seized a water tank and solar panels. The IOA also detained local Awad Ibrahim Ali Awad, 22, from the village. The IOA also demolished a house belonging to Ali Muhammad Abu Arram, in the Halaweh village. (IMEMC 21 March 2019)

- The Israeli occupation Army (IOA) invaded Tayasir village, east of Tubas in northeastern West Bank, and ordered a Palestinian, identified as Mohammad Yousef Dibik, to halt the construction of a small water reservoir on his own property. (IMEMC 25 March 2019)

- In Salfit, the Israeli occupation Army (IOA) handed the parents of Omar Abu Laila, 19, a military order informing them that their home will be demolished, and that they have until March 31st to appeal the decision. His mother said that dozens of IOA surrounded the property before invading it, and conducted a violent search, in addition to tearing his posters and pictures, before handing them the military order. It is worth mentioning that Omar Abu Laila was killed on March 19th, 2019, after the IOA surrounded an old home where he was hiding, in Abwein village, north of Ramallah, in central West Bank. After killing him, the ioa took his corpse and never handed it back to his family. (IMEMC 26 March 2019)

- The Israeli bombing has destroyed 30 civilian residential units, and caused damage to 500 others. The Israeli army started its latest offensive of the Gaza Strip, March 25th, 2019, by carrying out more than 50 air strikes, targeting dozens of civilian homes, apartment and commercial buildings, in addition to agricultural lands and structures, causing serious damage and dozens of injuries. (IMEMC 27 March 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation army (IOA) bombarded dozens of Palestinian homes, buildings and facilities across the besieged Gaza Strip, displacing many families in the already besieged, improvised and war-torn Gaza Strip. Owner of many of the targeted homes said the army called them just minutes before firing missile at their homes and added that they were barely able to remove their children from the properties before the Israeli missiles struck them. The Israeli missiles have led to many injuries among the Palestinians, including children and the elderly. (IMEMC 27 March 2019)

- 2 Palestinian structures were ordered to be demolished, by Israeli authorities, in the southern West Bank city of Yatta, in the Hebron Governorate. The two buildings, one the home of Abed al-Mutleb al-Nuajaa, the other a barn for livestock, belonging to Mousa Hassan al-Shuwaheen, using the steel structure for shelter for his sheep. The reason for the demolition orders was lack of building permits, which Israel uses as a pretext for demolishing Palestinian homes, to make room for illegal colonists and their settlements. (IMEMC 31 March 2019)

- A Palestinian family demolished their own home and certain steel structures, in the Pisgat Zeev Israeli settlement that is built on Palestinian lands of the Hizma village, north of occupied Jerusalem, upon order by the Israeli High Court. Family member Youssef Askar said that they began to demolish their structures upon receiving an order by the Israeli High Court allowing them until mid-April to carry out the demolition themselves. The family would be fined by Israel and forced to pay demolition fees, if the demolition is carried out by Israel. Israeli authorities have attempted to seize control over the land on which the family property was built 35 years ago. Israeli authorities reportedly claim that the land was previously confiscated, however, when the family proved ownership in court, they were told that the land belongs to the Custodian of Absentee Property. The family had built their home out of cement and steel on the 2-dunam land between 1982 and 1985, in addition to a warehouse and a steel structure used for agricultural purposes. - The Israeli Occupation Authorities notified to halt the construction on the lands of Palestinian farmers in Tammun village in Tubas Governorate. The targeted area is known as Um Al Kabish, east of Tammun, allegedly for bei classified as archeological area. (WAFA 8 January 2019)

- The Jerusalem District Court issued a temporary lien for a plot of land in occupied East Jerusalem belonging to the estate of the late Palestinian leader, Yasser Arafat. Hebrew-language news outlets reported that the court issued the order at the request of eight families, who identify themselves as “victims of terrorism,” and who filed a civil damages lawsuit against the Palestinian Authority (PA) and Arafat’s estate. The plaintiffs claimed that if they win the lawsuit, it would be difficult to collect the compensation from the estate and requested to place a temporary lien on the property, in order to fully collect their damages. A lien is a claim against an asset that allows a person to keep the property of a person who owes them money until it has been paid. The land measures 2.7 dunams (0.675 acres), most of which is located inside the cemetery on the Mount of Olives, which Arafat inherited. Arafat’s estate makes up 135-square-meters, about 0.5%, of the plot of land in question. However, the judge ruled that legally it was possible to put a temporary freeze on the entire plot. Yossi Arnon, the lawyer representing the PA in the case, said he intends on taking action to reverse the ruling. It is noteworthy that about 120 lawsuits are underway against the PA in Israeli courts based on claims that the PA is directly responsible for damages arising from “terrorist attacks.” (Maannews 22 January 2019)

Israeli Military Orders during the month of February 2019

• ISM activists were forced to leave the Shuhada Street area as it was declared a closed military zone. The activists were monitoring the Qurtuba checkpoint, which is passed every morning by teachers and children going to school. Over the 37 minutes that activists were present at the checkpoint, approximately 100 Palestinians were subject to its control and surveillance. Hebron Report. The declaration of a closed military zone came on the foot of a large coordinated settler attack on Palestinian families living close to this checkpoint. This took place on the night of February 12, 2019 and several people were injured. Significant damage was caused to Palestinian homes also. The following morning, ISM activists were forced out of the H2 area near Qurtuba by police with no explanation as to why. During this time, settlers moved freely with the police, harassing and filming activists as they were forced out. Footage can be seen here. Prior to the Israeli declaration, Anat Cohen, an infamously violent settler, assaulted an ISM activist. This was the fifth time in the past week that ISM activists have been assaulted by settlers. Leaving the Qurtuba area, activists joined others who were monitoring the Qeitun checkpoint. At Qeitun, the Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) fired 2 concussion bombs and 4 tear gas canisters at Palestinian people. One concussion bomb exploded very close to a mother and her baby. While thankfully there were no serious injuries, it is terrifying to think about the effect that such weapons would have on a newborn’s ears and lungs. (IMEMC 14 February 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) notified to demolish a Tourist Information tent in Al Masoudiya archeological area on Nablus-Jenin road owned by Muhammad Jaber Salem. Salem was also notified to remove the tiles and to halt construction in the site. (WAFA 17 February 2019)

Israeli Military Orders during the month of March 2019

- The Israeli occupation army (IOA) issued orders, for the confiscation of fifteen Dunams of Palestinian agricultural lands in Azzoun town, east of Qalqilia, in the northern part of the occupied West Bank, to “expand existing roads.” The lands are by the Northern Gate area where settlers Road #50 passes, and near other lands to the east of the road. (IMEMC 2 March 2019)

- The Israeli authorities issued court notices demanding ownership of a land on which a Jerusalem family owns a building in the Batn al-Hawa neighborhood in Silwan of occupied East Jerusalem. The Ater et Cohanim Israeli Jewish organization delivered the notices to nine members of the Maragha family; Hmeidan, Azziyeh, Salah, Fadwa, Munira, Naim, Rabia, Inaam and Itaf Maragha, demanding ownership to the land on which the family’s building was constructed. The building consists of five apartments and a parking lot, and houses 15 members of the family. The Maragha family said that their family has been living in this building in the Batn al-Hawa neighborhood for more than 100 years, adding that they have documents proving the family’s ownership of the land and the property. The notices come under Ateret Cohanim’s plan to seize control over 5 dunams and 200 square meters of the neighborhood, under claims that they belong to Yemeni Jews since 1881. There are between 30 and 35 buildings on the entire land demanded by the organization. (Maannews 5 March 2019)

Confiscation & Razing of lands during the month of January 2019

- Three Israeli D9 military bulldozers and an excavator raided dozens of meters into Palestinian lands in eastern Rafah City, coming from the Sufa military base and heading towards Khan Younis, raiding and leveling lands. (IMEMC 5 January 2019)

- Israeli bulldozers entered dozens of meters along the eastern borders of the town of Beit Hanoun in the northern besieged Gaza Strip and began to raze the lands. Meanwhile, Israeli military towers opened fire towards Palestinians east of al-Qarara town in southern Gaza. (Maannews 15 January 2019)

- The opening of the new road northeast of Jerusalem between Hizma and Zayem, which features separate lanes for Israelis and Palestinians, was greeted with almost total silence by the Israeli media, even though the road illustrates the government’s wanton spending in the West Bank and the Netanyahu government’s policy of pushing for annexation. The road was planned as part of Jerusalem’s eastern ring road, but only this 3.7-kilometer section of the planned 15-kilometer road has been built, due to a February 2005 decision by the Ariel Sharon government to include the settlement of Ma’aleh Adumim on the Israeli side of the separation barrier. From the end of 2000, Palestinians have been banned from entering Israel, including Jerusalem - leaving the only link between Ramallah and Bethlehem along roads that crossed the area of Ma’aleh Adumim. Without a road connecting Ramallah and Bethlehem that was open to Palestinian traffic, the separation barrier would have blocked these routes and divided the West Bank in two. The Sharon and Ehud Olmert governments rushed to build the road to create a travel alternative for the Palestinians – one that would meet the High Court of Justice’s test of proportionality – at a cost of 120 million shekels ($33 million), and it was completed in November 2007. But the road remained closed, due to the delays in the construction of the separation barrier and the road’s checkpoint, which the police and the army could not agree on as each wanted the other to take responsibility for it, plus the fact that it affected only Palestinians, who would have to extend their travel time due to this road. The investment was abandoned for a decade to the forces of nature, which meant the state had to invest tens of millions shekels more to repair the road that was never used. Building the road was also meant to pave the way for the construction of the Mevasseret Adumim neighborhood, also known as E1, which was planned to create a continuum of Jewish construction between Ma’aleh Adumim and the capital. But the E1 plan raised the ire of George W. Bush’s administration, given Palestinians claim that Israeli construction in E1 would partly cut off the northern West Bank from the southern part and make it more difficult to create a contiguous Palestinian state. Prime Minister Ariel Sharon promised that the neighborhood would not be built unless mutually agreed upon. Sharon kept his promise, but that didn’t stop him from going forward with the enormous infrastructure plans for E1. Israeli governments invested a quarter-billion shekels in building infrastructure for a neighborhood that doesn’t have a single home. Since the infrastructure was completed, Netanyahu’s governments have spent tens of millions of shekels maintaining them. Indeed, the road that was opened will considerably shorten the travel time for Palestinians between Bethlehem and Ramallah, and will even improve the safety of their journey. It will substantially improve access to Jerusalem from the Mateh Binyamin settlements. It may even lead to the removal of the A-Zaim checkpoint, which slows the traffic from Ma’aleh Adumim into Jerusalem. However, there is no truth to the declarations by Transportation Minister Yisrael Katz that the road will bring a “strengthening of metropolitan Jerusalem.” Apparently the minister chose to ignore that in metropolitan Jerusalem, between Nablus and Hebron, 90 percent of the people are Palestinians who aren’t allowed to enter Jerusalem. This road is also a major step toward realizing the proposals made by members of the Knesset Land of Israel Caucus to annex the Ma’aleh Adumim district, which have the support of many ministers, most prominently Education Minister Naftali Bennett and Justice Minister Ayelet Shaked. Given the absence of American responsibility and the weakness of the European Union, the opening of the road may encourage the right-wing government to move from “creeping annexation” to actual annexation by passing the proposed Ma’aleh Adumim annexation bill. This move, which would violate the fragile status quo, could never be accepted by the Palestinian Authority, even under the moderate and nonviolent policy of PA President Mahmoud Abbas. Abbas will not be able to withstand the pressure that will come from “the street,” from the Tanzim, from the ranks of Fatah, from the various fronts in the PLO and Hamas. Israel could expect serious political, security, economic and legal repercussions. But Bennett, Shaked and their colleagues believe that none of this will happen, because the world will remain indifferent, or because it needs Waze and cherry tomatoes. (Haaretz 17 January 2019)

- Several Israeli army vehicles and bulldozers invaded Palestinian agricultural lands in the al-Kharja area in Battir town, west of Bethlehem in the occupied West Bank, and bulldozed nearly 60 Dunams of farmlands in addition to uprooting 60 olive trees. A large military force invaded the al-Kharja area after surrounding it, and bulldozed nearly 15 Dunams of lands, including retaining stone walls, and uprooted 60 olive trees. The lands are privately owned by two Palestinians from Battir, identified as Raed Abu Hreitha and Riyad Abu Hreitha. The army closed the entire area and prevented the Palestinians from entering their lands while the soldiers were uprooting them. (IMEMC 21 January 2019)

- The Israeli so-called “Central Court” in occupied Jerusalem has issued a ruling “temporarily” placing a lien on 2.7 Dunams of Palestinian lands in Jabal az-Zeitoun (Mount Of Olives), including 138 square meters owned by late Palestinian President Yasser Arafat, in the occupied Palestinian capital, Jerusalem. The decision was made after several Israelis filed lawsuits demanding compensation from the Palestinian Authority due to “attacks carried out by Palestinians.” The plaintiffs are demanding compensation, not only from the Palestinian Authority, but also from the late Palestinian President Yasser Arafat, by confiscating Palestinian land. Nearly 0.5% of the land in question, 2.7 Dunams (135 square/meters), is owned by the family of the late Yasser Arafat. The lien was in response to a compensation claim filed by Israelis – not only against the Palestinian Authority, but also its late President Yasser Arafat. The plaintiffs allege that even if the court decides to award them compensation, it will be difficult to receive compensation from estate owned by Arafat and his inhabitants, therefore, they decided to ask for a lien on the property until the desired compensation is paid. Confiscation & Razing of lands during the month of February 2019

- Dozens of Israeli occupation Army (IOA), accompanied by bulldozers, invaded Palestinian orchards in Bardala village, in the West Bank’s Northern Plains, and uprooted at least 450 olive trees. The IOA surrounded the entire area, before invading it, and proceeded to uproot the olive trees, owned by several villagers. Last year, the army issued orders for uprooting the trees in that area, after alleging that the orchards are in “state-owned lands,” which have been illegally confiscated. (IMEMC 5 February 2019)

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) razed and leveled lands in the Urif village, in the northern occupied West Bank Governorate of Nablus. The IOA also sealed a road with dirt mounds to prevent villagers from reaching their agricultural lands. The razing comes hours after Israeli settlers, from the nearby illegal Israeli settlement of Yitzhar, complained about the opening of an agricultural road for Palestinian farmers in Urif, which caused clashes to erupt between locals and the IOA and settlers. (Maannews 15 February 2019)

- The Israeli occupation Army (IOA) razed a Palestinian-owned agricultural land in the village of Urif, south of Nablus, in the occupied West Bank. The IOA accompanied by bulldozers proceeded to raze an agricultural land near the main water tank of the village, in order to facilitate movement of illegal Jewish settlers from the neighboring settlement of Yitzhar. the razing of the land will deny access of local Palestinian villagers to about 200 dunums of their own land in the village. - The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) seized 4000-square-meters of tiles from the al-Masudiya area in the northern occupied West Bank district of Nablus. The tiles belong to a Palestinian identified as Muhammad Jaber Salem from the Bazariya village. The seizure comes under the pretext that the park is located in Area C that is under full Israeli military control. The tiles were transferred to the illegal Israeli settlement of Beit El in the central West Bank. Additionally, Khalid Tamimi, who runs the park/exhibition from which the tiles were confiscated, stated that the confiscated tiles are worth 100,000 Israeli shekels (approximately $27,600.) The IOA had reportedly raided the exhibition last Thursday and verbally ordered Tamimi to remove the tiles; The IOA returned, on Sunday, and allowed Tamimi 24 hours to evict the site. However, Tamimi said he was only able to remove 2000 square-meters out of the 6000 tiles there. (Maannews 19 February 2019)

Expansion of settlements

Expansion of settlements during the month of January 2019

• The Israeli army razed land in Dhar al-Maleh village, southwest of Jenin, northern occupied West Bank, in order to expand an illegal Jewish settlement. Israeli bulldozers started work on 120 dunams of village land and, in the process, destroyed a paved road, as the military was working on expanding the illegal settlement of Shaked, built on expropriated village land. The land in question was isolated from the rest of the village by the Israeli apartheid wall, which made it difficult for land owners and village residents to reach it. (IMEMC 2 January 2019)

• The Israeli government has allocated about 1,200 dunams (300 acres) for planning of a new neighborhood that would expand the settlement of Efrat toward Bethlehem, in an area considered particularly sensitive for diplomatic reasons. The neighborhood is expected to expand the built-up area in the Gush Etzion settlement bloc up to the southern outskirts of the Palestinian city, in a manner that would surround Bethlehem with settlements. The Civil Administration allocated the area to the Housing Ministry at the end of last month, a step that will enable the beginning of the active planning of the neighborhood called Givat Eitam (Eitam Hill). The hill is in Efrat’s area of jurisdiction, but on the eastern side of the
In 2013 the government tried to advance widespread construction in the territories, including several hundred residential units in Givat Eitam, but Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu torpedoed a similar plan due to international pressure. About a year later, then-Housing Minister Uri Ariel tried to advance the expansion, but it was halted. In 2016 the government announced that a land survey had been conducted at the site for the purpose of creating a contiguous area of state land between the hill and Efrat. This step was taken in view of the plan to build on private land owned by a subsidiary of the KKL-Jewish National Fund on the hill. A petition against the planned construction on the site was submitted to the High Court of Justice by Peace Now. At the end of last month the state informed the High Court that an important stage had been carried out for advancing construction at the site: The area was allocated to the Housing Ministry for planning. After the conclusion of the allocation process, which takes a short time, the actual planning of a residential neighborhood at the site will begin. In its announcement to the High Court, the State Prosecutor’s Office wrote: “Recently the intention of Respondent 2 (the custodian staff officer responsible for abandoned government property in Judea and Samaria) was formulated, with the knowledge of the political leadership, to enter a contract in a licensing agreement for planning with the Housing Ministry, regarding the state land in the settlement of Efrat that is at the center of the petition, for the purpose of planning a residential neighborhood. An announcement of this intention was published today, December 26, 2018, in the Bethlehem Coordination and Liaison Administration, and an announcement was sent to the Palestinian liaison.” As a result, the government allocated a large area to the Housing Ministry for the purpose of planning the neighborhood – 1,182.5 dunams on the hill. The planning license is scheduled to take effect within 30 days from the date of publication of the announcement on December 26. The head of the Settlement Watch team in Peace Now, Shabtay Bendet, said, “The government is crossing a red line in advancing a new settlement in E2, which is likely to be a lethal blow to the chance of peace and a two-state solution. The Netanyahu government is carrying out a dangerous and underhanded step in order to avoid public criticism in Israel and worldwide – it is no coincidence that this was done immediately after the announcement of the election, when public attention in Israel is directed at political developments and during the Christmas holiday, when the entire Christian world is on vacation.” The Efrat local council built a small outpost between two buildings on the hill.
last September. The illegal outpost served as a kind of statement of the council’s intentions. A residential neighborhood at the site is expected to include several hundred housing units. (Haaretz 8 January 2018)

• The Israeli Ministry of Finance has authorized a plan to illegally annex nearly 139 Dunams of Palestinian lands in Dir Dibwan village, east of the central West Bank city of Ramallah, to build new colonialist structures and segregated roads. The new plan aims at building the structures on privately-owned Palestinian lands in basins #32 and 33 of Dir Dibwan. The detailed plan aims at linking Ma’ale Mikhmas colony with Mitzpe Dani outpost, which were illegal installed on Palestinian lands. The new plan allocates nearly 48 Dunams for public buildings for the colonists, in addition to 26 Dunams for paving news segregated roads, 15 Dunams to be used as a park, in addition to other lands that would be used for stores and parking lots. (LRC, IMEMC 10 January 2018)

• Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu said on Monday during a visit to the outpost of Netiv Ha’avot in the Gush Etzion settlement bloc, that if it was up to him, “There won’t be any more uprooting or halting settlements - just the opposite: The Land of Israel is ours, and will remain ours.” Netanyahu met with residents of the West Bank outpost after ordering to allocate tens of millions of shekels to build a permanent neighborhood for them, promising that “What fell will rise, it’s ours, we’re building here and you’re living here.” The premier also addressed the investigations into the corruption cases he is embroiled in. “I’m asked all the time, how can you withstand all the investigations and the attacks against your family? I can do so thanks to this place - your sense of mission. We’ve returned to the homeland, to Netiv Ha’avot (i.e. the route of our ancestors in Hebrew). Abraham, Isaac and Jacob passed by here. We’ve been here for 3,000 years.” Netanyahu said that the order to evacuate 15 homes in the neighborhood in June was a “mishap,” and that a new neighborhood would be built, and “nobody will uproot us.” "We're a country that abides by the rule of law and we are subjected to High Court rulings. The home where this child was raised has been demolished but we won't have it anymore and that's why we are building this new neighborhood. There children will have homes here, we did not come back here after thousands of years only to be uprooted, nobody will uproot us." The houses were evacuated due to a petition to the High Court of Justice by Israeli left-wing NGO Peace Now and local Palestinian landowners, about 18 years after the settlers took control of the land. Of the 15 structures, six are partly situated on privately-owned Palestinian land that divides them lengthwise. The government tried to prevent the demolition with various plans, such as “sawing off” parts of the houses so as to avoid evacuating the residents. The solutions didn’t work out and the High Court ordered the demolition of the houses in their entirety. The other 25 buildings in the outpost will remain in place. Last February, the government allocated 60 million shekels ($16 million) for the evacuation, a sum that includes compensation to individuals and to the regional council as well as funds for the infrastructure of a temporary residential site. During the evacuation, demonstrators threw stones and objects at the police and wounded six of them. Three people, two of them minors, were arrested on suspicion of assaultng a policeman. • Israeli Zoning Board Approves Controversial Western Wall Cable Car: The National Infrastructure Committee has approved the plan to build a cable car to the Western Wall, a project whose opponents fear would mar Jerusalem’s Old City and bolster the Jewish presence in the Arab neighborhood of Silwan. The public will now have 60 days to file objections before the project can receive final planning approval. The cable car is being promoted by the Tourism Ministry and the Jerusalem Development Authority. The line would include three stops, the first at the First Station complex at the end of Emek Refaim Street across from Mount Zion. From First Station, the line would pass over the Abu Tor neighborhood, where a storage facility for the cable cars would be built. The route would then turn and pass over the Valley of Hinnom, and proceed to the Old City area. The second stop would be on Mount Zion, where a parking lot currently sits. From there the car would follow the Old City wall, ending just outside Dung Gate at the new Kedem visitor center in the City of David. From there, passengers could walk to the Western Wall, either through Dung Gate or through the restored ancient underground passageway. The planners say the cable car would help solve the severe traffic problems around the Old City, especially the heavy tour-bus traffic near the Western Wall. Cable cars are a cheap way of moving large numbers of people in an area of many hills, the Jerusalem Development Authority says. Opponents say the Transportation Ministry is not involved in the project. They add that the Jerusalem Development Authority has not released the project’s economic feasibility report as a public transportation project. The authority says it makes no sense to publish the financial data at this stage because a bidding process must be held to build and operate the project. The authority, however, has promised that a cable car ride will cost the same as a bus trip or a ticket on the capital’s light-rail system. Other objections concern the Old City landscape. “As far as I know, and I’ve researched the topic, there is no other historical city in the world that allowed a cable car to be built within the visual core of its historical heritage,” Moshe Safdie, a renowned Israeli architect, wrote in an analysis of the project last year. But the project’s architect, Mendy Rosenfeld, said the damage to the landscape would be minimal. The cable car is lower than the Old City walls, and far enough away that it would not be noticeable, he said. Also the cable cars would only hold up to 10 people, allowing the support towers to be kept small as well, Rosenfeld said, adding that the structures at the stops would be transparent and without advertising. Aner Ozeri, who is responsible for the Old City at the Jerusalem Development Authority, said the opponents have no better solutions, adding that the cable car is the only technology that would not damage the natural scenery. - A West Bank settler group on Tuesday said the number of people living in Israeli settlements surged at a much faster rate than the overall Israeli population last year and predicted even more rapid growth thanks to the policies of the Trump administration. Baruch Gordon, director of West Bank Jewish Population Stats, said the White House has created a much friendlier environment for the settlers, clearing the way for a surge in construction in the coming years. “It’s just simply opened up. There’s no longer this cloud looming over it,” Gordon said. Gordon’s project conducts an annual study of official population data obtained from the Interior Ministry. The report is sponsored by “Bet El Institutions,” a prominent settler organization that has ties to some of President Donald Trump’s closest Mideast advisers. The latest data shows the population in Jewish settlements of the West Bank grew to 449,508 as of Jan. 1, up 3.3 percent from 435,159 people a year earlier. In comparison, Israel’s overall population grew 1.9 percent last year to 8.907 million people, according to the Central Bureau of Statistics. The Interior Ministry was not immediately able to confirm the scores of figures, but said it had been in touch with Gordon’s group and the numbers appeared authentic. The data showed robust growth in settlements across the board, from large towns located near Israeli population centers to isolated communities deep inside the West Bank. Gordon cited several reasons for the rapid growth. An estimated two-thirds of the settler population are religious Jews, who tend to have larger families. In addition, he said the cheap costs of housing have lured many young families that cannot afford homes in Israel proper. But he also said the Trump administration’s attitude toward the settlements is also having an effect. Former president Barack Obama, like a string of Republican and Democratic predecessors, opposed the settlements as obstacles to peace and put heavy pressure on Israel to halt construction. Trump, in contrast, has done little to stop the construction. While urging restraint at times, the White House has otherwise remained quiet as Israel has pressed forward with numerous developments. This, in effect, has given Israel a green light to lay the groundwork for a surge in construction that should materialize over the next year or two, Gordon said. “Since the change of the US administration, the atmosphere for construction permits has become much easier. They’re being given with greater ease,” he said. “I think possibly the next report and certainly in the ones after that, I think we’ll start to see a huge surge in the numbers here,” he added. The figures did not include data for east Jerusalem, where well over 200,000 Israeli Jews now live. The Palestinians claim both the West Bank and East Jerusalem, areas captured by Israel in the 1967 Six-Day War, for a future independent state. They say the settlements are illegally gobbling up their land and harming the chances of a two-state solution — a position shared by most of the international community. Nabil Abu Rdeneh, spokesman for Palestinian President Mahmoud Abbas, called the growth in the settler population a “direct result” of US policy. “The American support for settlements through silence is doomed to failure because there is no peace and stability without an agreement with the Palestinian people and its legitimate leadership,” he said. A US Embassy official said Trump has made his position on settlements “clear” and has received Israeli pledges to take his concerns into consideration. “The administration is firmly committed to pursuing a comprehensive peace between Israelis and Palestinians,” the official said, speaking on condition of anonymity under diplomatic protocol. The report echoed separate findings by Peace Now, an Israeli anti-settlement watchdog group that said last month that Israel has pushed forward plans for thousands of new settlement homes since Trump took office. It also predicted a huge increase in construction in the next few years. Peace Now said the data in Tuesday’s report seemed “logical,” citing the Israeli government’s policy “to encourage construction and relocation to the West Bank.” It said the Trump effect “cannot be seen at this time” because of the lag time between approval of permits and actual construction. Trump’s Mideast team has said it is close to releasing a long-awaited peace plan. Trump’s Mideast team is led by members with ties to the settlements. His ambassador to Israel, David Friedman, is a former president of Bet El Institutions, the sponsor of Tuesday’s report. His chief Mideast adviser, son-in-law Jared Kushner, has donated to the group, and even Trump once sent a donation. In another break from the international community, the team so far has not endorsed the idea of an independent Palestinian state. The Palestinians have already pre-emptively rejected the peace plan, saying the White House is unfairly biased toward Israel. Gordon, the settler researcher, said the latest data should put an end to the international community’s longstanding support for a two-state solution. “Those who continue to talk about a two-state solution, in my mind it’s just a sign that they’re removed from the reality and the facts on the ground,” he said. - In recent weeks, settlers have reestablished the illegal outpost Tekoa E. Two buildings have been erected so far and a number of young men and women are on the spot. The outpost is located two kilometers south of the Tekoa settlement in the area run by the Gush Etzion Regional Council east of Bethlehem. In the past, a road was opened at the point where the outpost was built from the nearby Tekoa D outpost, and today, too, it is used by the settlers to reach the site. Although the outpost was evacuated in the past, it was rebuilt. This is the second time that settlers have tried to establish this outpost. It was established for the first time under the auspices of the Gush Etzion Regional Council after the abduction and murder of the three youths in the summer of 2014. At the time, the Council set up a number of caravans in the illegal outpost, but after a few weeks the settlers evacuated the area after reaching an agreement with the defense minister in return for a plan that would approve and retroactively legalize neighboring Tekoa D, according to media reports. It was also reported that the defense minister promised the settlers that in return for evacuating the outpost he would approve the construction of a farm in Tekoa E. In March 2013, the Blue Line team of the Civil Administration completed the work determining that the area on which the Tekoa E outpost was built was considered “state land.” However, the area of the outpost was not included in the jurisdiction of any settlement, as was the adjacent outpost, Tekoa D. The establishment of the Tekoa E outpost in the last few weeks joins a number of new illegal outposts that have been established over the past twelve months. For more details about the previous establishment of the outpost, click here. ([PEACENOW](7 February 2019))

- Dozens of Israeli ministers and senior officials from the Likud political party and other right-wing parties have signed a petition to settle two million Jews across the occupied West Bank. Israeli Knesset Speaker Yuli Edelstein and ministers Gilad Erdan, Miri Regev, Yisrael Katz of the Likud party, Ayelet Shaked and Naftali Bennett, of New Right party, were among signatories on a petition to abandon the two-state solution and establish new Israeli settlements across the occupied West Bank. The signed petition was put forward by the Nahala Movement, an Israeli settler group, to promote an Israeli settlement plan introduced under the government of late Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir in the early 1990s. The main objective of the petition is to settle two million Jews in the West Bank. ([IMEMC](10 February 2019))

- The state informed the Jerusalem District Court that it will retroactively legalize structures built in part on private Palestinian land in the West Bank settlement of Alei Zahav. In doing so, the state will for the first time invoke a legal mechanism the attorney general approved in December, senior sources say. Alei Zahav is a secular settlement located close to Route 5, which links Ariel and the Greater Tel Aviv area. According to the legal mechanism approved in December, it is permissible to retroactively authorize illegal construction on private Palestinian land if the land was allotted "in good faith," meaning if the state erroneously believed that it was state lands when it allotted it. After the West Bank was occupied in 1967, Israel used now-obsolete surveying technology to declare certain areas as state land, but these plots were not always marked accurately on maps. A Civil Administration team is now using new technology to correct the line, known as the “blue line,” retroactively, finding that some areas that were thought to have been state lands were actually never seized by the state. The land on which construction took place in Alei Zahav was considered state land, according to the old maps. The Civil Administration team discovered in 2016 that land on which some buildings were built was actually private Palestinian land. Attorney General Avichai Mendelblit gave a legal opinion in December, following several attacks on Israeli forces and civilians in the West Bank, that led Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu to Error! Hyperlink reference not valid. In his opinion, Mendelblit said he believes a rarely used clause from 1967 can be used to legalize construction on land that was believed to belong to the state when it was allocated to the settlers, even if in fact it didn't. The clause refers to a "transaction," although in most cases nobody paid for the land. The legal mechanism allowing the retroactive authorization of these lands is based on Clause 5 of a military order from 1967 dealing with state property in the West Bank, which says that "a transaction made in good faith between the custodian of government property in the territories and another person, regarding a property the custodian believed at the time to be government property," is valid, even if the land did not belong to the state. This means that if the Civil Administration, the custodian of government property, conducted the "transaction" in good faith under certain conditions then it is considered valid – even if it is legally faulty. According to estimates made by the Justice Ministry and the Civil Administration, a complete implementation of the new interpretation of the military order could be used to regulate the status of 2,000 structures in areas currently deemed to contain illegal structures. When the Civil Administration team made its discovery in 2016, settlers from Alei Zahav filed a lawsuit against the Harei Zahav contractors, the Defense Ministry and the World Zionist Organization for acquiring land on which construction was illegal. However, in December the state announced that it would try to retroactively legitimize these plots, using the legal interpretation of the clause. The court allowed the state to begin the process, in the meantime freezing discussions of the settlers’ lawsuit. Before the state can take possession of the Alei Zahav plot, it has to publish its plans for the area, opening it to the filing of objections by Palestinians claiming ownership over it. A legal source involved in this case confirmed these details. Referring to the so-called "land expropriation law," which passed in 2017 and allows the state to expropriate Palestinian land on which settlements or outposts were built “in good faith or at the state’s instruction,” Attorney Alaa Mahajna, who represents Palestinians claiming ownership over the disputed area, said: “Even without making use of the vilified expropriation law, the state still finds ways and uses other routes to attain the same goal, giving its legal imprimatur to robbery of land, with residents who are protected under international law.” The implementation of the "expropriation law" was frozen until the High Court of Justice rules on petitions against it. This is the second time the state has used Clause 5 to achieve similar goals. In August, the Jerusalem District Court allowed the legalization of the illegal outpost of Mitzpe Kramim. However, Mitzpe Kramim was a singular case and different than Alei Zahav, since in Mitzpe Kramim the authorities were much more deeply involved in its establishment. The Mitzpe Kramim case is currently under review by the Supreme Court, the results of which could also affect the Alei Zahav case. Although Mitzpe Kramim was an exceptional case, experts in property law in Israel and the West Bank said after the ruling on it that courts can interpret the ruling to allow a mass legalization of homes in the settlements. The use of Clause 5 for Alei Zahav would be the first time the clause is used in its December interpretation, and could set an even stronger precedent for mass legalization. Throughout the West Bank there are similar examples, of many houses built on land thought mistakenly to be state lands but which later on transpired not to be. According to a Civil Administration document submitted in the past to the High Court, there are at least 1,048 structures built on West Bank land mistakenly thought to be state lands. According to the same document, 1,122 additional structures in the West Bank were built in breach of planning laws more than 20 years ago. (Haaretz 10 February 2019)

- The Israeli occupation authority (IOA) plans to establish a huge settlement in the northern occupied West Bank on 200 dunums of Palestinian land belonging to Qalqilya and Salfit Governorates. The plan also includes the construction of 2000 settlement units under the name of “Dorot Illit”. (IMEMC 10 February 2019)

- Israel informed the Jerusalem District Court that it will retroactively legalize structures built in part on private Palestinian lands in the illegal Israeli settlement of Alei Zahav in the occupied West Bank, and will for the first time invoke a legal mechanism approved in December 2018. Alei Zahav is an illegal settlement located close to Route 5, which links Ariel and Tel Aviv, and was built on Palestinian lands, which Israel seized from residents of Deir Ballut and Kafr al-Dik villages in the northern West Bank district of Salfit. The legal mechanism states it is permissible to retroactively authorize illegal construction on private Palestinian land if the land was allotted "in good faith" if Israel incorrectly believed that the lands belonged to it at the time of its allotment. After Israel occupied the West Bank in 1967, Israel used surveying technology to proclaim certain areas as its own, however, these lands were not always marked accurately on the maps. Currently, the Israeli Civil Administration uses new technology to correct the line, which is also known as the "blue line," retroactively, and discovered that several areas that were thought to have been state lands were never seized by Israel. According to the old maps, the Palestinian land on which the construction of the Alei Zahav settlement took place was considered to be Israel’s land, yet in 2016 the Israeli Civil Administration discovered that the land on which some buildings were built was indeed private Palestinian land. The legal mechanism, which allows the retroactive authorization of these lands, is based on Clause 5 of a military order from 1967 dealing with state property in the West Bank, that states "a transaction made in good faith between the custodian of government property in the territories and another person, regarding a property the custodian believed at the time to be government property" is valid, regardless of whether the land did not belong to Israel in the first place. Essentially, if the Israeli Civil Administration, which is the custodian of the Israeli government's property, carried out the transaction "in good faith" then it is considered "valid" even if it is legally flawed. Its is noteworthy that the Israeli Justice Ministry and the Civil Administration made estimates that a complete implementation of the new mechanism could be used to set the status of 2,000 structures in areas considered to contain "illegally built structures." Expansion of settlements during the month of March 2019

• The Israeli occupation’s Ministry of Construction and housing is to offer, during the coming period, hundreds of housing units for sale, in a number of the settlements of the occupied West Bank and Jerusalem. About 700 units will be built in the occupied Palestinian city of Jerusalem, as well as 260 others, to be set up in the occupied West Bank. The building plans have been green lighted early, and the process of marketing these units will start when approved by the Israeli political levels. (IMEMC 14 March 2019)

Erection of Outposts

• The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) closed the western entrance to Ras Karkar village, northwest of Ramallah, occupied West Bank, with an iron swing barrier. An Israeli truck arrived at the western entrance of Ras Karkar carrying concrete blocks, to use them as bases for the road barrier. The IOA, with the help of a vehicle-mounted crane, worked on setting up the barrier at the western entrance, which connects the village with the main road leading to Ramallah city and other nearby villages. The army also closed off the eastern entrance to the same village with concrete blocks. This entrance leads to the nearby village of al-Janiya. Such road closures will isolate about 4,000 local residents of al-Janiya and Ras Karkar from Ramallah city and prevent students from going to their schools and universities and employees from going to their workplaces. Israeli Closures
Israeli Closures during the month of January 2019

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) invaded Tal village, south of the northern West Bank city of Nablus, and installed a military roadblock in Bir al-Ghazal area, before stopping and searching dozens of cars, and interrogated many Palestinians while inspecting their ID cards. (IMEMC 20 January 2019)

- Israeli authorities have decided to close schools run by the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine refugees (UNRWA), as soon as early 2020. The Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu discussed the decision with members of the Israeli National Security Council, during a meeting last week. No permissions will be issued for UNRWA schools to act in East Jerusalem from early next year, saying they will be replaced by schools run by the Israeli municipality of the city. The United States, the largest single contributor to UNRWA, announced last August that it would end its $350 million a year funding for the agency, describing the organization as an “irredeemably flawed operation”. The UNRWA is responsible for delivering services to some 5.4 million Palestinians, while this move will affect some 3,000 students who attend seven UNRWA schools in two refugee camps that sit within Jerusalem’s municipal boundaries, according to the agency. (IMEMC 21 January 2019)

- Then Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) closed the entrances to the village of Umm Safa, to the west of Ramallah city. The IOA closed the western and the eastern entrances of the village, banning entry and exit of residents to and out of the village. No clear reason was given for the closure. This closure was enforced for several hours after Israeli military vehicles raided the village, where THE IOA detained and interrogated a man before releasing him shortly afterwards. (IMEMC 24 January 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) set up several checkpoints at the eastern and southern entrances of Qaliqliya, another checkpoint on the northern entrance of Azzun and another on the entrance of Izbat al-Tabib. The IOA also installed an iron gate at the main road near the Zawata town in the northern West Bank Governorate of Nablus. The IOA set up an iron

- Israeli under-cover forces raided Jamal Abdel Naser Mosque in Al Bireh city and confiscated the recordings of its Surveillance cameras. The forces assaulted Hamza Ghannam, an employee of the Mosque and hand-cuffed him before destroying the door leading to the Monitoring room and confiscating the recordings. Confrontations erupted between Palestinians and the forces resulting in the injury of three Palestinians from live-coated bullets fired against protesting Palestinians. (WAFA 8 February 2019)

- Israeli occupation authorities sealed off several roads surrounding the northern occupied West Bank Governorate of Nablus, due to Israeli settlers protesting in the area. Israeli authorities sealed off the main Huwwara road and the road leading to the illegal Israeli settlement of Yitzhar, in addition to closing the Huwwara checkpoint and preventing passage in both directions. The seal off lasted about two hours. Israeli settlers blocked the roads as they protested “the deterioration of the security situation in the West Bank”. (Maannews 11 February 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) closed the main gate in Bab ar-Rahma with chains to prevented workers of the Waqf and Islamic Endowment Department from entering it, in addition to denying the worshipers access to the holy site. (IMEMC 19 February 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) completely sealed off the Wadi al-Radem road in southern Nablus City, in the northern occupied West Bank, with dirt mounds, for the fifth time in a row. The closure comes as a result to complaints of several Israeli settlers, living in the Yanoun area. The Wadi al-Radem road serves several Palestinian agricultural roads, and leads to wide spaces that would soon be used for solar panels and substitute energy. (IMEMC 28 February 2019)

- The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) sealed off the entrance to the Aboud village northwest of the central occupied West Bank district of Ramallah and al-Bireh. The sealed off the iron gate set up at the main entrance of the village, preventing vehicles from entering the village. Residents of the village were forced to use long alternative roads. (Maannews 9 March 2019)

- Israel’s new mayor of Jerusalem is planning to push for the volume to be turned down on the city’s mosque loudspeakers during the call to prayer.
Israeli television reports indicated that the move would be one of the first policy pushes by Moshe Lion after he won the municipal election in November, replacing hard-right mayor Nir Barkat. The initiative will see Jerusalem’s mosque loudspeakers replaced with new ones that broadcast at a lower volume. Police will be allowed to reduce the volume of the speakers in they are deemed to be too loud. (TOI 1 January 2019)

- Israel has drastically reduced the number of Palestinian farmers who are allowed to work their lands located between the separation barrier and the Green Line, according to Civil Administration data. In 2018, 72 percent of Palestinian requests for farming permits were refused, compared to 24 percent in 2014. There are also very few permits issued for “agricultural employment,” beyond the barrier, permits generally given to the relatives of the plot owner who work with him, but also to paid laborers. This information was supplied to Hamoked – the Center for the Defense of Individual Human Rights in response to a Freedom of Information Law request. However, it lacks valuable data concerning, for example, the number of seasonal, short term permits which Hamoked believes often replace the long term permits. The statistics correspond to reports submitted by farmers to Hamoked, to Machsom Watch activists and to Haaretz about bureaucratic obstacles that have been added over the past four years to get the permits to cultivate their land. The land between the barrier and the Green Line, which Israel refers to as the “seam zone,” totals 137,000 dunams (33,853 acres). Since the start of 2018 through November 25, the Civil Administration approved only 1,876 requests for farming permits of the 7,187 requests submitted – an unprecedented refusal rate of 72 percent. This compares to a refusal rate of 24 percent in 2014, when the number of requests totaled 4,288, and the number of permits issued was 3,221. According to the Civil Administration’s data, the number of requests for agricultural employment permits dropped from 24,424 in 2014 to 14,857 in 2017. In 2018 the number of agricultural employment permits dropped to only 2,959. While during 2014 to 2017 the refusal rate was around 30 percent, in 2018 around half the requests were refused. The Civil Administration also provided a breakdown of the reasons for refusal. Only a small percentage of the refusals during 2015 to In 2018, an average of 2.2 percent, were for security reasons. (There was no data for 2014.) Common reasons for denying the requests, according to the Civil Administration documents, were “failed administrative examination,” “the land is in Judea and Samaria [that is, not in the areas beyond the separation barrier],” “request lacks details,” and “request lacks documentation.” These are bureaucratic reasons that according to many of the farmers are due to errors they didn’t make. Hamoked has been assisting farmers who’ve been refused permits since 2009; their work has ranged from making inquiries with the Civil Administration to identify and correct bureaucratic errors to petitioning the courts. Hamoked has dealt with 1,400 such cases altogether, with 527 of them in the last three years. During those three years Hamoked’s intervention has helped reverse the refusals in almost two-thirds of the cases, resulting in 352 Palestinian farmers getting permits. Other reasons the Civil Administration gives for refusing the permits include “failing to meet the policy criteria,” “there are enough permits for the land,” “no connection to the land,” and “the land isn’t cultivated and there is no direct connection to the land.” In 2018, 83 percent of the requests were denied for “failing to meet the criteria,” even though many of these farmers have been dealing with the permit regime since the early 2000s. A reason that Civil Administration clerks often state out loud, but which isn’t listed in its response to Hamoked, is that the plot for which the farmer is seeking a permit is “too small,” to require cultivation (this refers to plots smaller than 330 square meters). This reason could explain the substance behind the written reasons cited above, and reflects the enormous change Israel is trying to impose on the Palestinians’ ownership and land cultivation customs. Since 2014, the Civil Administration does not recognize the plot owner’s spouse or his children as having any rights to work the land. They are eligible for an entry permit as “employees” – if the plot is big enough according to the “criteria.” When they examine a farmer’s request, the Civil Administration takes into account only his relative portion of the family’s land (which is often still registered by the name of grandparents or parents), with no consideration for family traditions of working the land together or the fact that siblings are abroad or otherwise employed and unavailable for farm work. That’s how small, 330 square meter plots emerge that ostensibly don’t need cultivation, even though they contain trees and have been cultivated for decades. The Civil Administration’s response will be published separately in the coming days. Hamoked executive director Jessica Montell said, “The data confirm Hamoked’s position that contrary to the High Court of Justice ruling that recognizes the residents’ right to work their lands with their families and employees, the army is acting systematically to deprive the Palestinians of this basic right, to restrict the entry of Palestinian farmers into the seam zone and to gradually dispossess them of their land.” (Haaretz 3 January 2019)

- An enchanted garden blooms on the roof of the Hirsh family’s home in the West Bank village of Qaffin. In large tires and buckets filled with fertile soil, Fahima grows giant cabbages, mint, beans, parsley and crisp lettuce. She has also planted begonias, geraniums and climbing plants to delight the heart with their colors. The stairwell and entryway are filled with plants as well. “Ever since they barred us from reaching our land, she has invested all her energy in the roof garden,” her husband Jihad says affectionately. He’s referring to 2002, when Israel started building the separation barrier – which, as its name implies, separates Palestinians from their land. “What didn’t we grow on our plot?” Fahima says, the longing clear on her face. “Sesame, corn and parsley between the olive trees, watermelons, melons, cucumbers.” But that’s all in the past because such crops require daily care, and the gates in the fence around Qaffin open only three days a week. So all they have left is olive trees, and the oil they make from them. The land was registered in the name of Jihad’s grandfather. After his grandfather died, the family agreed that Jihad’s father and uncle would inherit it. After his father passed away in 1987, the land went to Jihad and his cousins. Since the barrier and its permit system were created in the mid 2000’s, the Hirshes received permits to enter their land from the Civil Administration’s liaison office, which is subordinate to the Ministry of Defense’s Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories, known as COGAT. But for some reason, the last permit Jihad received was for one year rather than two, and it expired in October 2017. Also surprisingly, the permit was the type given to relatives of the plot owner who work with him or to agricultural paid laborers ("agricultural employment") rather than the "agricultural permit" that is meant to be given to the plot’s owner. And when that expired, his pleas for renewal ran into a wall: Either they... were rejected with no explanation, or they weren’t even answered. Jihad couldn’t understand it. In late 2017, when they received a different type of entry permit - “for personal needs” - they saw what had happened to their plot with nobody to care for it. “The weeds in the plot, between the trees, grew like a forest,” Fahima said. The following June, the liaison office rejected their latest request for a permit with the explanation that the plot isn’t in the “seam zone” – the area between the separation barrier and Israel. What happened? Did the map suddenly change? Did the land move? The Hirshehs aren’t alone. Last year, according to the Civil Administration, 72 percent of requests for agricultural permits were rejected, while half of the requests for agricultural employment permits were rejected as well. The couple decided they couldn’t deal with the bureaucracy alone, so they sought help from the Hamoked Center for the Defense of the Individual, which began writing and phoning the liaison office. Hamoked is well-versed in the regulations governing the seam zone and knew what the Hirshehs didn’t: They had the right to object and appeal the denial of a permit, if it was not for security reasons. Hamoked’s requests for reviewing the refusal went through the civil administration’s exhausting bureaucratic process, but either went unanswered or were answered very belatedly. Then, in October, an officer in the Tul Karm liaison office told Hamoked that Hirshel “is not entitled to a permit because he doesn’t meet the criteria, his is a negligible plot, 157 square meters, (1,690 square feet)”. “How did the land suddenly shrink?” Fahima asked, laughing in astonishment. Her back and arms remember that the plot they worked wasn’t tiny at all. The land shrank because the Civil Administration, which implements the government’s policy in the territories, so decreed. It denies all the Palestinian traditions of collective ownership and collective work, divides the land on its own discretion and grants a permit according to the applicant’s individual proportional share of the land. That’s one half of the story. The other is that the Civil Administration’s agricultural experts decided that plots smaller than 330 square meters aren’t entitled to be cultivated. According to COGAT’S regulations, the plot’s size is determined by “multiplying the plot’s entire area by the applicant’s percentage share of the ownership.” Moreover, “there is no viable agricultural need when the size of the plot for which the permit is sought is negligible, not exceeding 330 square meters.” The head of the liaison office may grant permits to work smaller plots “in exceptional circumstances,” the regulations say. But that means the recipient won’t be entitled to “agricultural employment” permits for his wife or children. To obtain permission to resume working his land, the Hirshehs petitioned the district court, represented by Hamoked. Until the hearing in February, Jihad and his wife will fearfully imagine the weeds growing wild on their plot, just 3 kilometers (1.9 miles) from their house. My meeting with the Hirshehs was preceded by one with Ibrahim Amar. His house on the outskirts of the village is surrounded by a small plot, perhaps 130 or 160 square meters, which proves that even a "negligible" plot can produce a bounty - bananas, avocado, Pecan and citrus, to name some - when the crops are properly tended. Last March, thanks to Hamoked’s assistance, Amar and his son Khalil received new permits to work their land after 10 months without permits. During that period, "I got sick from frustration," Amar said. He needed an operation on his head, and his leg was paralyzed for a period. The weeds grew to the height of a man, he added. Once, the liaison office said he only had 60 square meters, he told me, speaking with anger and hurt as he recounted the troubles he has undergone since 2002, including arguments with Civil Administration officers and with the soldiers who open and close the gates in the fence. In September 2017, when he had already been without a permit for four months, the Civil Administration’s ombudsman told him and Khalil that their requests for permits had been denied because their land wasn’t in the seam zone. Amar and his son had been through this before. In 2011 and again in 2013, the Civil Administration made the same claim, until Hamoked petitioned the High Court of Justice on their behalf. Following that petition, Civil Administration officials surveyed and measured Amar’s lands and confirmed that they were indeed where they had always been. Amar and his son received the permits and the petition was withdrawn. Now, just a few years later, the saga has begun again, as if there were no computers that remember all the details. But when Hamoked informed the authorities it would petition the High Court again, the permits were miraculously restored to Amar and his son for another two years. Because the gates are open only three days a week, Amar, like the Hirshehs, gave up on crops such as vegetables, which require daily care. His eyes, too, show a longing for the days when he grew watermelons and sesame between the olive and almond trees. Ibrahim Amar and Jihad and Fahima Hirsheh are in their 60s, which means they don’t need a personal permit to enter Israel. Yet according to COGAT regulations, they can’t use the freedom of movement their age grants them to go to their family’s plot or to the village’s other lands, which are trapped between the separation fence and the Israeli border.
Only Israelis and tourists can enter the seam zone— that is, Palestinian land — without a military permit. From the roofs of the Hirsheh and Amar houses, you can see the Israeli community of Harish. “Harish was built on lands that were ours before 1948,” when Israel was established, Amar said. “Let me at least continue to work the lands that remain with us.” (Haaretz 5 January 2018)

- If there was a handbook of how to win an election, then top of the list for any right-wing candidate, particularly the prime minister, would most definitely be – don’t evacuate an outpost in the opening days of the campaign. Yet early Thursday morning, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu did just that. In a pre-dawn raid, security forces moved against two modular caravans on the site of the former Amona outpost that filled with right-wing activists, mostly teens. Security forces forcibly removed them, then placed the two caravans on flatbed trucks and drove them away. It is akin to Netanyahu financing, writing, designing and published a campaign ad on behalf of any of his Right opponents. All the Bayit Yehudi party or the new Hayamin Hehadash (the New Right) parties need to do is run footage from Amona with the slogan saying, “Vote for us, we don’t uproot Jews.” It’s a situation made even worse by the Netanyahu-led Likud party’s own history. It remains as the only party to have actually evacuated settlements and territory: the Sinai in 1982 and Gaza in 2005. There is also the division of Hebron in 1997, yes, also under Netanyahu and the Likud. The number one rule for any prime ministerial candidate – from any party – would be: don’t admit that you lack complete knowledge and control of what is happening with the country’s security services. Yet, in the aftermath of the evacuation, Netanyahu blamed his military adviser Brig.-Gen. Avi Blot for the removal of the two mobile homes. Blot apparently failed to inform him in time to stop the evacuation, which was carried out against Netanyahu’s wishes. This would mean that the IDF and Border Police carried out a sensitive security operation that could have impact on West Bank stability without the knowledge of the prime minister, who heavily controls events in Judea and Samaria. It’s a step made worse by the fact Netanyahu also holds the post of defense minister. But Netanyahu’s need for the right-wing voter in this election is so great that he felt it was better not to be accountable than to let it be known that he doesn’t have full knowledge of what the military was doing. The premier would have done better to insist that he was carrying out the rule of law, given that the evacuation occurred under a court order. That’s particularly true, given that all they removed were two old mobile homes. But Amona, which survived the demolition of nine permanent homes in 2006, and which was completely demolished in 2017, has a particularly emotional resonance among the Right. When Amona fell in 2017, Netanyahu rode the wave of anger by authorizing a completely new settlement, the first in more than 20 years. The stage is set for Netanyahu to recoup the electoral loses from Amona by approving a project on the right-wing wish list, which would strengthen Israel’s hold on Judea and Samaria. But in the immediate aftermath of the evacuation, the loudest demand was for the demolition of the illegal West Bank herding village of Khan al-Ahmar. Earlier in the week, Public Affairs Minister Gilad Erdan had insisted that Netanyahu must authorize the South Hebron hills outpost of Asa’el and transform it into a new settlement already this Sunday. It is a move, which aside from its location, would be very easy to do. It is on state land and there are advance plans for its development. The only barrier could be the wrath of the US. But one can almost imagine the conversation between Netanyahu and US President Donald Trump. The besieged Israeli leader would explain that he needed to do this to help assure his re-election. But in the aftermath of Amona, Erdan did not repeat his call for the community’s authorization. The only person who showed up at the Prime Minister’s Office in Jerusalem was Eran Dgani from Kfar Eldad, who represents the forum of 70 fledgling communities, otherwise known as outposts. Forget about one outpost. Dgani told Netanyahu in his letter that now was the time to seize the moment and authorize all the outposts as new settlements or neighborhoods of existing ones. “In the face of the terrible destruction this morning, you must authorize our communities and restore the right of the thousands of citizens who live there,” Dgani wrote. He also brought a pen with him, just in case the premier lacked one. “We understand that in your office there are pens that are used for demolition only, and as a result, apparently you have not signed the authorization so far. Therefore, we are honored to give you a new pen – the pen of authorization,” he said. It’s unlikely that Netanyahu plans to use that pen for all 70, but to hold on to pro-settler voters, he will now need to make a grand gesture to appease the Right. This could very well include the approval of a new settlement or a significant project to shore up credentials as a right-wing leader. (JPOST 5 January 2019)

- The state announced this week to court that the Lahav 433 police anti-fraud organization, as well as the State Prosecutor’s Office, will be “examining” Peace Now’s complaints of two cases of illegal construction in the Binyamin Region Council area of the West Bank. The announcement came following two petitions that Peace Now filed to the High Court demanding that the Police and the State Prosecutor open investigations against the heads of the Binyamin Regional Council, the Amana settlement movement and other bodies that were involved in big projects of illegal construction in settlement outposts. One petition was about the establishment of the illegal outpost of Kerem Reim (west of Ramallah), and the other petition was against the construction of 21 housing units in the illegal outpost of Hayovel (south of Nablus). The hearing of the petition concerning Hayovel will take place this Monday (7/1/19).

Peace Now: For 50 years now, a handful of settlers have been using public funds through the settlement councils and Amana to put facts on the ground that affect the future of all of us in violation of the law and of the government’s decisions. The hesitation of the State Prosecutor’s Office and the police to investigate the organized crime of illegal construction in the settlements is tantamount to granting immunity to the offenders and shows a lack of respect for the rule of law. The message the government is sending to the settlers is that they are above the law. Many of the settlements in the West Bank were established not only against international law, which prohibits the establishment of civilian dwellings of the occupying population in an occupied territory, but also against Israeli laws and regulations applying to the West Bank. Much has been written about the phenomenon of the illegal outposts – settlements which were established without government approval and without going through the legal process of planning and obtaining rights to the land. Under the Netanyahu government, efforts are being made to retroactively legalize these illegal settlements, rather than to evict them. In early 2017, Peace Now published a thorough report unraveling the mechanism behind the illegal construction in settlements. The report showed how official bodies like the local authorities and the Settlement Division of the WZO, as well as the Amana settlement organization and other bodies, are systematically using tax payer money to establish illegal facts on the ground and to found new settlements. Although it is a well-organized mechanism, the government and the law enforcement bodies have never investigated those responsible in the crimes, nor have they ever filed an indictment against them. Peace Now has been filing complaints to the police and the State Prosecutor’s Office with evidence showing who is responsible for the illegal construction and how, demanding to open investigations against them. In all of those complaints in the last couple of years, the response was that there was no decision yet on whether to open investigations or not. Because of the reluctance to open investigations, Peace Now has gone to court with four cases demanding that an investigation be opened, on the establishment of the Kerem Reim outpost, construction in Hayovel outpost, construction in Shvut Rachel and a general complaint against many cases of illegal construction by several regional councils and Amana. The examination opened by the police anti-fraud unit together with the State Prosecutor’s Office is problematic. On the one hand, for the first time, this unit will look at the evidence and consider the possibility of opening an investigation. On the other hand, an examination is an ambiguous, non-legal term that comes in lieu of a proper, legal investigation. An “examination” may just be the state’s tactic to mollify the High Court by showing that it is serious looking into the matter, though without actually taking any substantive action. If the court does determine that an examination is sufficient, it is likely that the examination will lead to nothing. If the court insists on an investigation, the result may lead to further action against those behind the illegal construction. (PEACENOW 6 January 2018)

- The sharp increase in the number of rejections of requests submitted by Palestinian farmers who want to reach their land on the other side of the separation barrier amazed even the staff of Hamoked – Center for the Defense of the Individual. This organization knows something about the abuse caused by the bureaucracy of the barrier, because in the past 10 years it has handled about 1,400 requests by farmers whose access to their land has been blocked. On November 26, after a long delay, the Civil Administration sent the figures for the number of permits and the percentage of refusals to Hamoked, in response to a Freedom of Information request. When the separation barrier was built deep inside the West Bank, several of us warned that its route was not chosen for security purposes but for the sake of annexation by another name. And in fact, the large Palestinian area penned between the barrier and the Green Line has been turned into promenades and hiking and biking paths open to Israelis, while the Palestinians, the legal owners of the land, enter only after an odyssey of requests for permits, which are steadily decreasing. Some questions I sent to the spokesman’s office of the Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories (COGAT) are detailed below with a few abridgments, followed by the full answer: Q. From 2014 to 2018 there have been fluctuations in the number of requests for an “agricultural permit.” For example, from 2014 to 2016 there is an increase from 4,288 to 9,687 requests. In 2017 there is a sharp decline to 5,460, and in 2018 the number increases to 7,187. The requests for agricultural employment permits declined from about 24,000 in 2014 to only 2,959 in 2018. How do you explain these fluctuations and declines in requests? Q. In those years there is a clear increase in the number of refusals: In 2014, 24 percent of the requests for an agricultural permit were turned down, and since then the percentage of refusals has been steadily increasing: 37 percent in 2015, 54 percent in the following two years and 72 percent in 2018. The increase in refusals is also evident in the permits for agricultural employment. How do you explain the steep rise in refusals? Q. Farmers report that one of the reasons for turning down their request is the Israeli claim that the plot of land in their possession is too small to cultivate. However, in the Civil Administration’s written answer to Hamoked – Center for the Defense of the Individual, the size of the plot does not appear on the list of reasons. Why? Q. One of the reasons cited for failing to grant a permit is: “The land is in the territory of Judea and Samaria.” Is the land west of the separation barrier situated in Israel, in your opinion? COGAT replied: “The regulations of the Civil Administration regarding entry into and residence on the seam zone were decided based on the decision of the court, and are updated from time to time in accordance with procedures and need. The seam zone is defined as a closed military zone and entry to it is allowed with a permit, due to the fact that it is an area of land situated west of the security fence. Every request for a permit that is received is examined individually, based on policy and criteria. “The change in the trend of accepting and approving the requests stems from a number of variables; it is possible that in certain cases requests were received during various periods in which they no longer meet the present updated criteria, and therefore were refused. “In addition, in certain cases land was found that is not even in the area of the seam zone, but rather adjacent to it, and was restored from the seam zone to the Palestinian side in Judea and Samaria, and accordingly we see the change in the number of permits. In addition, occasionally there is a change in the trend among those requesting the permits, and accordingly in the number of requests that are approved. “For additional details you can peruse the file of permanent orders for the seam zone, which is accessible on the internet and which explains the criteria for receiving an entry and residence permit in the seam zone.” A defense source told Haaretz, “There are figures that point to changes in the number of permits, which stem from changes in the duration of the permit (an agricultural permit was previously given for half a year and is now given for two years) and changes in the criteria for the types of permits (members of farming families previously received agricultural employment permits and now there is a designated permit for a farmer’s family members).” The source also claimed that “in light of the absence of any physical obstacle between the seam zone and the State of Israel, there are many attempts to receive a permit fraudulently, and that requires a meticulous examination of the requests.” And maybe the issue remains unclear to you because Palestinians are far from the public eye, and especially farmers whose land is their livelihood and their property and their savings, but is designated for our future Israeli private homes. Not to worry: There will be more articles about the massive land robbery being perpetrated by Israel. Incidentally, the defense source attached the orders file, but with a link to … the Hamoked website. Hamoked’s executive director Jessica Montell said, “The only justified excuse for closing the seam zone, according to all the declarations and promises of the army and the government, is security related, but only a negligible percentage of the refusals is for security reasons. COGAT says outright that people who received permits in the past no longer meet the new criteria determined at the start of 2017.” Montell emphasized: “That is precisely Hamoked’s claim. Many people are suddenly not getting their permits renewed due to the new excuses – such as the infuriating claim that it is a ‘tiny plot.’ What difference does it make that the plot is small? A person has a right of access to the land he owns even if it’s only one square meter.” (Haaretz 7 January 2019)

• The land here tells the story. The wheat fields are now a brilliant green against the dark brown background of the fertile soil, summer’s aridity transformed into winter’s mud. But the land is scarred. The verdant fields have been slashed by tank treads, leaving ungainly gashes among the wheat and barley, harbingers of a wasteland. These are the fields of Khirbet Ibzik, a shepherding community in the northern Jordan Valley. It’s privately owned land on which Palestinian fellahin and Bedouin shepherds raise their livestock and cultivate fields belonging to the residents of the city of Tubas, on the slope of the hill nearby. Israel, which covets the Jordan Valley for itself eternally and is doing all it can to rid it of its original inhabitants, has apparently chosen to start by abusing its weakest groups: the shepherds and the tenant farmers, the Palestinians and the Bedouin. They can be evicted from their homes and their land, even if temporarily, with a mere wave of a military directive, under the cover of illusory security and training needs, and they can be evacuated and expelled time after time. Has a settler outpost ever been evacuated by the Israel Defense Forces to enable its troops to train in its fields? Would anyone even conceive of evicting dozens of settler families for 24 hours and leaving them to fend for themselves under the forbidding skies, so the IDF can conduct an exercise? Have the residents of the nearby settlements – the Beka’ot, Maskiot, Mekhora and Ro’i moshavim – ever been forced to leave their homes for a night or for a whole day and night, so soldiers can train on their land, and on their return found it trampled over by tanks? One after another, signs of apartheid at its worst accumulate here. There’s no place like the Jordan Valley to demonstrate its crass, violent, brazen and arrogant presence, leaving no room for doubt or argument about the existence of the separation regime. Khirbet Ibzik is a community of dark-skinned people who can apparently be preyed on at will. Where people are evacuated from their homes, even children and the aged, at the order of an officer, evicted whenever fancy strikes, and their fields invaded as though they were unclaimed wilderness. In the past month alone, the residents of this little community were ordered to abandon their tents multiple times. Thirteen families – 70 souls, among them 38 children – were forced out, on December 16, 23, 26 and 31. Two of the 13 families received additional orders to leave, on December 17 and 18. We arrived at Khirbet Ibzik on Monday when the last evacuation, on the last day of 2018, was scheduled to take place. On the previous evening, a man named Yigal from the Civil Administration had called one of the residents to inform him that the evacuation had been called off, but that it might take place the following Sunday. The mukhtar of the local Bedouin community, Imad Harub Turkeman, looked bemused when we came to his blue tent, on which the title “mukhtar” is written in Arabic. Despite his satisfaction, Turkeman was concerned that the cancellation announcement was false and that the soldiers would evict them anyway. The uncertainty here runs deep. The hours passed, the sun shone above, no Israeli soldiers appeared on the horizon. Photographs and video clips from the earlier evacuations, the most recent of which had taken place the week before, taken by Aref Daraghmeh, a field researcher for the Israeli human rights organization B’Tselem, also tell the story. They show the locals walking silently in single file, escorted by IDF and Civil Administration vehicles, lest they slip away, heaven forbid. Images that cannot but evoke the sights of the 1948 Nakba, the Nakba that continues here. Turkeman’s family is originally from a village near Haifa, he relates. The video of the latest eviction in Khirbet Ibzik shows the iron chains and treads of IDF armored vehicles crushing the crops tended by the residents. According to Daraghmeh, shepherding communities in the northern Jordan Valley have been ordered to evacuate their tents at least 100 times in the past five years. The shortest eviction lasted five hours, the longest 24 hours. The only way to get here is via a long, winding dirt road that starts in the town of Taisir. That road is muddy now; the rain has turned parts of it into a quagmire. In any event the locals are afraid to drive here, because they know the Civil Administration and the IDF are liable to confiscate their pickups and other vehicles. Thirteen tractors and pickups have been confiscated in the past few years, for having allegedly entered closed military areas, Turkeman reports. The vehicles are generally returned after a few months, after the owner pays a fine of between 1,500 and 2,500 shekels ($420 to $700). So, there are periods in which they live in a state of total disconnect, with no means of transportation – plus there’s no electricity, of course. Without vehicles it is extremely difficult to rush someone who’s sick or a woman about to give birth to a clinic or hospital. The shepherds bring their water in tanks from long distances, usually by tractors which they sometimes have to hide between the rocks, to prevent their confiscation. Or they post observers, to make sure there are no soldiers or Civil Administration personnel along the way, and then sneak in a water tank hitched to a tractor. Turkeman is sitting barefoot in his tent, which is heated by a wood-burning stove emitting smoke through a chimney. His sheep huddle in the nearby pen. He’s 42, the father of six children. He sent his firstborn son to Jenin, to work in construction. His family, he says, has been temporarily evacuated about 40 times in the past five years. Here’s how it works. About a week before the scheduled day, IDF and Civil Administration forces arrive, go from one tent to the next and distribute the evacuation orders, which the inhabitants must sign: “Order Concerning Security Directives (Consolidated Version) Judea and Samaria No. 1651,” issued by the “Territorial Unit for Supervision,” containing “a warning of obligation to evacuate a closed area by virtue of my authority according to clauses 262 and 318 of the Order Concerning Security Directives,” etc., etc. Orders, powers, directives – the occupation’s books are rife with them. All proceeds according to law and order – the occupier’s law and order. All this applies only to non-Jews, of course, in the Jordan Valley and throughout the territories. On evacuation day the troops go again from tent to tent, ensuring that everyone leaves. According to Turkeman, they know every family and know how many children each one has. They do a head count and occasionally discover that a child is missing. The convoy of evacuees forms in a single line, and they begin to move, a few kilometers from the tent encampment, until they scatter, each to his fate. Sheep and property are left behind. Sometimes the shepherds take the ewes, but the lambs remain and must be looked after. One of the young people may have to steal back to the site, far from the soldiers’ prying eyes, to safeguard the flocks and the property, until they are permitted to return. One local inhabitant who was caught returning to his tent during the last evacuation was punished: An agent of the occupation authorities emptied out his water tank. Sometimes the troops leave behind unexploded ammunition that endangers the shepherds’ lives. On July 22, 2017, a 16-year-old shepherd, Udei Nawaja, was killed in the presence of his brother in the pasture. The regular pattern repeated itself last week, on December 26. At about 11:30 A.M., the tanks appeared from the direction of Bardala, a Palestinian village south of Beit She’an. Daraghmeh, the field researcher, who was there at the time, counted about 70 tanks and other armored vehicles, two bulldozers, a few jeeps and infantry soldiers. Accompanying them were representatives of the Civil Administration and the Nature and Parks Authority. At 11:50, two jeeps drove in, one IDF, the other of the Civil Administration, and their personnel proceeded to go from tent to tent, from family to family, hustling everyone out, driving them from their homes. They asked Turkeman, who emerged with five children, where the sixth one was. (In Jenin, working in construction.) It was cold and muddy. The shepherds and farmers walked. Mithkal Turkeman somehow managed to slip away. Civil Administration personnel launched a search for him, found him hiding in the valley and returned him to the convoy. After a few kilometers of marching, the locals were left on their own. Some of them headed for the next village, Raba. They would have to make do until 6 o’clock the next morning, when they would be allowed to return home. The IDF Spokesperson’s Unit stated, in reply to a request for comment: “The area in question has been an active IDF firing zone for many years. This past December, live-fire training maneuvers essential to the army’s fitness and preparedness were conducted there. In accordance with existing procedures, and so as to avoid endangering anyone who may have entered the firing zone illegally, the residents there were given advance warning so that they could depart during the periods when the training was taking place.” (Haaretz, 7 January 2018)
Abu al-Huzun was choking back tears throughout our conversation. Other farmers, whose land is also trapped west of the separation fence, let their feelings of loss slip in, after asking many rhetorical questions. A third wrung her hands as she described her yearning for the field from which Israel has barred her. One’s heart goes out to them – workers of the land, familiar with every tree in the family plot since childhood, who helped their parents to sow the sesame and harvest the parsley and shared the work and the produce with their cousins. The bounty they reaped from their work is evident in their modest but meticulous houses, in the children studying at university and the top floors they built on their houses for them. And then came the hangman. Before their eyes, but concealed from all public attention, an organized land theft has taken place in calculated stages, armed with a collection of wicked orders drafted by Israel’s coordinator of government activities in the territories and with the exhausting, sadistic bureaucratic hurdles posed by its Civil Administration in the West Bank. Abu al-Huzun (not his real name), sitting in the living room of his house in a northern West Bank village, recounted this gradual process. When the wall was built in 2003, they were denied access to their land for eight months, except during the olive harvest. Then they received permits to go to their orchards without problems, “because the Civil Administration has all our deeds of ownership and registration.” But the nearest gates in the fence were shut. They were forced to go through a distant gate. Instead of three kilometers, they had to travel 12 or 20 kilometers or more. In 2005, four fires broke out on their land. The farmers saw them from the other side of the fence, but couldn’t put them out. Some 1,500 dunams went up in smoke. They paid a lawyer a lot of money to demand that the nearest gates be opened. The gates were opened – but only three days a week. Pesticides should be sprayed when it’s cool, either in the morning or the evening – when the gates are closed. Their trees’ production plummeted by about 30 percent. They stopped planting. Nevertheless, there were a few years when things got better. But since 2015, the rules have become more stringent. Abu al-Huzun and thousands of other Palestinian farmers have to satisfy a list of petty conditions to prove that this is their land, that their plot is larger than 330 square meters and that there is an “agricultural need” to work it, and also in order to switch the type of produce they grow or get permission for their children to join in the work as farm laborers. But their grandchildren are forbidden to do so. Farmers waste a lot of time and money running around from a Palestinian local clerk to the Israeli liaison office to a Palestinian notary, all just to be told by an Israeli bureaucrat that their plot isn’t actually located where it has always been, or that it’s negligible in size, or that they forgot to sign and attach the necessary documents. At that point, some turn to Hamoked – Center for the Defense of the Individual and ask its staff to prove that their land hasn’t moved, that all the requisite signatures are there and that their 80-year-old grandfather isn’t capable of weeding, plowing and harvesting. Months pass, and the weeds grow tall on their land. Fully 137,000 dunams (nearly 34,000 acres) of private and public Palestinian land have been trapped between the separation fence and Israel. Despite all the promises to the High Court of Justice that Palestinian property rights won’t be harmed, the Israelization of this land deepens every time its legal owners, their children and their grandchildren are denied entry. The unofficial Israeli excuse for this bureaucratic abuse is that village residents are “exploiting” their permits to enter Israel to work. The sophisticated, experienced officers and legal advisers who planned and permitted the construction of the separation barrier far from the Green Line knew very well this would happen. They knowingly planned another Israeli ruse, one of many, to increase the green living space available to Jews. (Haaretz 8 January 2018)

- After a delay of years, Route 4370 in the Jerusalem area has opened. This road connects the settlement of Geva Binyamin to Route 1, the Jerusalem-Tel Aviv highway, between French Hill and the Naomi Shemer Tunnel, which leads to Mount Scopus. The highway, which has been called the “Apartheid Road,” is divided in the middle by an eight-meter high wall. Its western side serves Palestinians, who cannot enter Jerusalem, whereas the road’s eastern side serves settlers, who can now reach French Hill and Mount Scopus more easily from Anatot, Geva Binyamin and Route 60, north of the city. The West Bank has many segregated roads, but none of them is divided along its entire length by a wall. The road was built over a decade ago but remained closed due to a dispute between the army and the police over the staffing of a new checkpoint, opened because of the road. The road has recently been renovated by Moriah, the city of Jerusalem’s infrastructure company, even though the road lies outside the city’s jurisdiction and will not serve its residents. The budget for the highway came from the Ministry of Transportation. Most of its users are expected to be settlers living north of the city, who come to the city daily to work and study. In recent years, congestion has greatly increased at the Hizma checkpoint, which the settlers go through. For now, the new road will open only between 5 A.M. and noon, when traffic is heaviest. The head of the Binyamin Regional Council, Yisrael Gantz, who took part in the opening ceremony, called the road “no less than an oxygen line for the region’s residents, who work, study and go out for entertainment in the city. In a successful cooperation venture between the regional council, the Jerusalem municipality and the Ministry of Transportation, access to the capital has been revolutionized,” he said. Part of the work included the erection of a new checkpoint, which will be closed to West Bank Palestinians. Drivers on the Palestinian side will be able to go around Jerusalem without having to enter the city. The opening ceremony on Tuesday was attended by Jerusalem Mayor Moshe Leon, Transportation Minister Yisrael Katz and Minister of Public Security Gilad Erdan. Leon said that “the road is a true blessing for residents of Pisgat Ze‘ev and French Hill. Opening this road during high congestion periods will distribute more evenly some of the pressure on existing highways, leading to significant easing.” He added that “in addition to solving traffic congestion problems, we are strengthening the Binyamin Regional Council and inaugurating the natural link between this area and Jerusalem. Katz said that the road is “an important step in linking Binyamin Council residents to Jerusalem and in strengthening metropolitan Jerusalem.” Erdan added that the highway is an example of the ability to create a common life between Israelis and Palestinians while addressing security concerns.” The Jerusalem municipality said that “this was a transportation project that came about as a result of cooperation between itself, the Binyamin Regional Council and the Transportation Ministry. The road was rehabilitated by Moriah, with funding from the ministry. It will serve Arab residents, especially those living in the Shoafat refugee camp. It will ease congestion in the Pisgat Ze‘ev and French Hill neighborhoods, distributing traffic more evenly.” (Haaretz 10 January 2018)

Data on the population of Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley in 2018:

As in previous years, this year too, we publish data on the population of Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley at the beginning of the year. With the beginning of 2018, fifty-one years after the liberation of the ancestral lands, the Israeli settlement in the area includes about 150 settlements with 448,672 residents. An analysis of the data shows that the annual growth of the population in the region in 2018 is 3% per year, with the average annual growth rate of 4.3% per year. More than twice the average growth in the State of Israel, which stands at 2% in 2018. The increase in percentages in 2018 (3%) was lower than in 2017 (3.4%) and is the lowest in a decade. The growth in the number of persons also declined, in 2017 it was 14,299 residents per year, while in 2018 it stands at 12,964 residents. In the past decade, the settlement has grown by an average of 15,043 residents per year. Nevertheless, we still maintain a relatively high growth rate relative to the national average of 2% per year. With regard to religion, the trend in which there is almost equality between the groups continues, with each group - national religious, ultra-Orthodox and secular - constituting about a third of the general population in the region with a small advantage for the national - religious and ultra-Orthodox sectors. The largest localities in Judea and Samaria are of course the cities (by size): Modi'in Illit, Betar Illit, Ma'aleh Adumim and Ariel, where 195,771 residents live together. The local councils in Judea and Samaria have 95,890 residents (22%), and the regional councils, which are spread over most of the area, are home to 157,008 residents (31%). The largest settlement that is not a council or a city is Kochav Yaakov in Binyamin, followed by Sha'arei Tikva in Samaria, Geva Binyamin (Adam), Talmon, Kfar Adumim, Shilo and Tekoa. In terms of the growth in localities, this year, too, the town of Eli Zahav (including Leshem) in Samaria has the highest growth rate with 22.6% growth in 2018. Among the other settlements that grew in particular were Ma'ale Amos in Gush Etzion (17%), Sal’it in the Jordan Valley (16.5%), Beit Ha'arava in the Dead Sea Scrolls (15.9%) and Sansana in the Hebron Hills (13.8%). In the regional councils, the largest increase was recorded in the Mount Hebron Regional Council, whose growth rate in 2018 stands at 6%. The regional councils of the Dead Sea region (5.9%), the Samaria Regional Council (5.5%), the Jordan Valley Regional Council (4.8%), the Binyamin Regional Council (2.6%) and the Gush (1.2%). The local council with the largest increase is the Efrat Local Council, which has a 8.7% growth rate in 2018. It is followed by Emmanuel (6.5%), Karnei Shomron (4.4%) and Beit Aryeh Ofarim (3.5%). The highest growth rate was Modi'in Illit (3.9%), followed by Betar Illit (3.5%). Another important factor is the average age, when residents of Judea and Samaria are younger than the national average. According to data from the municipal elections that took place this year, 55% of the residents of Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley are over the age of 17, while the average in the entire State of Israel stands at 73%. Although the percentage of growth in Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley is still higher than the national average, it has been declining steadily for a decade. In 2008, the growth rate was 5.6% and now stands at about half. The conclusion is one and only, and is particularly striking against the background of the upcoming elections - in recent years there is insufficient construction throughout the settlement. The approved construction is relatively small compared to the freeze period and does not meet the required growth rate and demand. For example, boys who continue to live in the settlement can not do so because their parents' settlement has no new homes. The increase in natural birth rates is increasing, and the growth due to migration is decreasing due to lack of housing units. Fortunately, there is an increase in the number of residents in the area. But in recent years, building small relative because of the moratorium was for eight years and is now approved plans for limited only. The data we publish here is a call for direction for the next government: an effort is required to release construction barriers in Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley. This is the way we can continue to promote settlement and even increase the supply of apartments and thus lower housing prices throughout the country. We continue to work constantly for the sake of the important goal - a million Israeli residents of Judea, Samaria and the Jordan Valley soon. (Braking News, Yesha Council 10 January 2019)

- A new bypass road, Route 4370, has just opened to traffic, linking settlements north of Jerusalem to the capital. Even before the ribbon-cutting it became a visual symbol because of the wall that bisects it — one side for Israelis, most of them settlers who commute to the city daily, the other for Palestinians. The road lets them detour around Jerusalem, which they are barred from entering, on their way to Ramallah or Bethlehem. It would appear to be good news: Both Israelis and Palestinians will benefit from the new road, which stands to shorten their commutes and ease congestion. But the 8-meter-high divider makes it a grotesque symbol of Israel’s policy of segregation in the West Bank. Under this policy, the rights to much of the land and infrastructure in the West Bank are divided between Israelis, who may move freely in nearly the entire area; and Palestinians, who move between isolated islands on separate roads. Israel spends hundreds of millions of shekels to build roads, junctions, tunnels and bridges to support this policy, as well as checkpoints staffed by more and more soldiers and police officers in order to separate those who nonetheless fall through the cracks in this system of separation. The segregation policy began with bypass roads, out of the security needs of the two intifadas, but for years now it has been portrayed as a temporary solution to ad-hoc problems, until such time as a permanent diplomatic solution is found. That may be the reason why it took over a decade to open the new road to traffic after its completion; it seems there were those who held out hopes there would be no need for such a ridiculous thing. But under the latest government of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, the temporary became permanent, the adhesive bandage became a permanent form of treatment. In the absence of any diplomatic vision for resolving the conflict with the Palestinians, all that was left was to build a wall and plan another checkpoint, in a desperate attempt to hide the 2.8 million Palestinians living in the West Bank alongside half a million Israelis. During the ribbon-cutting ceremony, Yisrael Gantz, the chairman of the Binyamin Regional Council, called the new road “an lifeline for the residents of Binyamin,” thus disclosing a bitter truth about the settlements: They have no raison d’etre without a strong, constant connection to the State of Israel. The new road won’t whitewash the settlements and it won’t make the Palestinians disappear, it will only add another stain to Israel’s reputation. (Haaretz 11 January 2019)

• For the average Israeli coping with flooded streets and leaking roofs this winter, there doesn’t seem to be any water crisis. Northern Israel has exceeded normal rainfall, with most places recording 150% or more average levels. Lake Kinneret – the Sea of Galilee – has risen more than 19.5 centimeters (7.7 inches) this week alone. But the heavy rains are following five years of drought during which the Water Authority failed to invest enough to ensure that Israel has a long-term, reliable supply. Officials are determined to make up for the lost time and investment as quickly as possible, but they face a legal obstacle: Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s caretaker government is barred by law from making critical, costly decisions, except in urgent cases. Thus, while Israel is being drenched, officials from the finance and energy ministries and other branches of the government are trying to convince their counterparts at the Justice Ministry that Israel not only faces a water crisis but should deem it a national emergency that demands immediate attention. If they succeed, the cabinet should be able to approve in the next few weeks an ambitious program to at least double investment in the water sector over the next seven years. Government officials estimate that this will amount to about 10 billion shekels ($2.7 billion at current exchange rates), but experts in the water industry say the cost is more likely to run to 2 billion shekels a year, for a total of 14 billion shekels ($3.8 billion). With such a fat prize officials face another obstacle besides skeptical a Justice Ministry. They are determined that the government-owned water company Mekorot be barred from developing most of the biggest projects, even though an agreement with unions right now guarantees that two-thirds of all engineering work Mekorot needs be done by the company’s EMS Mekorot Projects subsidiary. In the name of cost efficiency, the government wants to put the projects up to competitive bidding by Israeli and overseas companies. Mekorot would only have a management role as a partner with the winning bidder, but Mekorot employees and the Histadrut labor federation are fighting this. The water crisis has been years in the making. The five drought years didn’t do much to convince the Water Authority that it needed to step up investment in developing new supplies, the state comptroller said in an October report. Also, the authority failed to stem a rise in per capita water consumption and reduced the annual target for desalination from 750 million cubic meters, which the government had set in 2013, to 600 million cubic meters through 2020. “The Water Authority walked on the edge time after time, loosening the reins immediately after one rainy year while ignoring the long-term effects in the region of climate change,” the comptroller said. “The absence of sustainable planning and mismanagement by the authority have caused another water crisis.” The program calls for building two new desalination plants – one in the Western Galilee and one next to the existing Soreq plant south of Tel Aviv that would be the world’s largest. Together they would add 300 million cubic meters annually to Israel’s desalination capacity of 858 million. Other major undertakings include drilling wells at a rate of 20 annually and building a pipeline to deliver desalinated water to the Kinneret. The latter project originally called for a pipeline to deliver no more than 100 million cubic meters of water at a construction cost of 700 million shekels. But Jordan, which is desperately short of water, may need to buy it from Israel. If so the pipeline feeding the Kinneret could triple in size and cost. The catch is that Jordan doesn’t have the money to help pay for an enlarged pipeline. Israel has good national security reasons for ensuring the stability of the kingdom, but many officials fear that Israeli consumers could end up covering the cost. In addition, if the Israeli-Jordanian plan to pump water from the Red Sea into the Dead Sea gets underway, Israel will be spending money on a system to distribute desalinated water from a Jordanian plant to farms in the southern Arava down south. If the Red-Dead project doesn’t begin, a desalination plant in Eilat will have to be doubled in size. The cost of financing such a massive undertaking is expected to be borne by Mekorot, which would act as manager of the projects. The state-owned company doesn’t have the financial resources to do this, so the plan is to increase its shareholders’ equity by selling real estate and issuing bonds of up to 800 million shekels. If the program fails to go ahead as planned, the government will have no choice but to scale down spending to 6 billion to 7 billion shekels financed by government-backed bonds or (the least attractive choice) by raising water rates up to 10%. Except for the two desalination plants, whose developers and operators will be chosen by a bidding process, the rest of the work will come under Mekorot’s purview. Officials say this is because the other projects require an expertise that the government doesn’t have. In any case, rather than exclude Mekorot altogether, the plan is for the state-owned company to act as a contractor for private-sector companies chosen by competitive bidding to perform the work. - Israeli institutions and organizations are preparing to build the so-called “Third Temple” in place of Al-Aqsa Mosque, and are waiting for a political decision to start. Israeli TV reported, on the alleged anniversary of the temple’s destruction, that Israeli institutions which seek to build the temple were met with wide political and popular support. The organizations explained that they are ready to bring the equipment and tools to start building the temple in place of both the Dome of the Rock and Al-Aqsa Mosque. They further stated that the total time needed to accomplish the building is three years, according to their plans. (IMEMC 15 January 2019)

- Israel’s military courts imposed fines topping 60 million shekels ($16 million) on West Bank Palestinians from 2015 to 2017, even though the great majority of the offenses don’t involve the harming of people or property. Two reports by the Military Court of Appeals’ president were submitted to the Al-Dameer Association for Human Rights at its request and were brought to Haaretz’s attention this week. In 2016 the fines came to 21.97 million shekels, and in 2017 to 20.59 million shekels. Also, a lawyer at the Palestinian Prisoner Affairs Ministry told Haaretz about a year ago that in 2015 these fines totaled some 21 million shekels, also based on military court figures. These aren’t exceptional sums: In 2011 the total fines imposed on Palestinians in military courts reached about 13 million shekels, according to figures Haaretz obtained in 2013. Some 8,000 trials ended that year. The money is deposited in the Israeli Civil Administration’s accounts in the West Bank and is managed by an officer also subordinate to Israel’s Finance Ministry. It’s hard to find a system and uniformity in the scales of the fines, as reports by the Machsom Watch rights group reveal. At the beginning of December 2018, a military judge, Maj. Sivan Omer, convicted a resident of Beit Ummar of throwing a stone at security forces from an unknown distance. The stone did not hit anyone and caused no damage. He was sentenced to six months and a day in prison and fined 2,000 shekels. In mid-October 2018, Judge Sebastian Osovsky convicted a 45-year-old man of what the court considered a “hostile terrorist offense” – he went on a family picnic holding a hunting rifle with one bullet in it. In a plea deal he was sentenced to two months in prison and fined 3,000 shekels. At the end of July 2018, Judge Rani Amer convicted a man of trading in military equipment and possessing weapons. His role was to accompany someone involved in such trade, examine the weapons and do some of the mediation. He was sentenced to 12 months and a day in prison and fined 1,000 shekels. At the end of November 2017, a minor was convicted of throwing stones at soldiers who stood near his school. He was released after three days in jail for a fine of 3,000 shekels. The father preferred to pay the full fine instead of paying 2,000 shekels and having his son spend 12 days behind bars. In April 2017, a youth from Bethlehem was convicted of passing funds to the families of two prisoners for Islamic Jihad. In addition to an eight-month prison sentence he was fined 12,000 shekels, the same sum as the money he had transferred. At the end of January 2017, the police arrested a 12-year-old, claiming he had thrown stones. The vague indictment mentioned the throwing of stones at vehicles on Route 465 “or in a nearby place.” The military prosecution at Ofer suggested that the family pay 5,000 shekels for his immediate release. The family couldn’t afford the payment. Judge Shmuel Katz agreed to a plea bargain and sentenced the boy to 31 days in prison and a 500-shekel fine. The Palestinian Authority’s minimum wage is 1,450 shekels, though many people aren’t even paid this sum. The military court system’s activity reports break down the number of Palestinians against whom indictments were served and the number of defendants whose trials ended, based on the kinds of offenses: hostile terrorist activity, disturbing the peace, trespassing and traffic violations. But the reports don’t break down the sum of fines in each category. Out of 10,454 Palestinians who were charged in 2017, more than half – 5,857 – were charged with traffic offenses, 2,072 were charged with hostile terrorist activity. (Of which 10 people were charged for killing intentionally and 69 for intending to kill. More common offenses were carrying weapons and belonging to an illegal organization.) Also, 1,020 Palestinians were charged with disturbing the peace (more than two-thirds for stone-throwing). Meanwhile, 1,064 were detained for staying in Israel illegally, and under 5 percent – 432 – were charged with criminal offenses. In 2017, 66 percent of those charged with hostile terrorist activity, 1,363 people, did not belong to any political organization. Regardless of the reliability of the charges, this figure shows the decline in the status and influence of the political organizations in Palestinian society. In the previous year the rate of unaffiliated defendants was 72 percent – 1,369. The number of defendants affiliated with Hamas changed: 278 in 2016 compared with 316 the following year, though their rate among the defendants remained at about 15 percent. Around 14 percent were affiliated in 2017 with non-Palestinian Salafi groups, compared with 8 percent in 2016. About 100 defendants split among organizations such as Palestinian Islamic Jihad, the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine and Hezbollah. Despite the meticulous breakdown in the military courts’ reports, in July 2018 the Israel Defense Forces spokesman said in response to a question by the group Combatants for Peace – based on the Freedom of Information Law – that he could not provide figures on the fines and guarantees paid in military court. The response, sent to lawyer Eitay Mack, was written by Capt. Gal Turgeman, an assistant to the IDF spokesman and the IDF officer in charge of freedom of information. “The military courts’ computerized system does not enable the extraction of reliable data regarding the sum of the fines collected in the military courts,” she wrote. “Therefore, we cannot grant your request. However, we will note that the IDF’s computer people are working to develop a new computer system, which, after it is developed, will be able to provide an answer regarding future information.” The officer in charge did not give Mack the figure in the system of the overall sum of fines imposed. The IDF spokesman told Haaretz that the overall figure appearing in the reports refers to the fines imposed, not those actually collected. “The military courts are not the body that collects the money, it only imposes the fines. The military courts, being the judicial branch in the Judea and Samaria region, are not in charge of collecting fines,” the spokesman said.

Experience shows that a Palestinian cannot be released from detention or prison without paying the fine imposed on him, regardless of the offense’s severity. “The fines imposed on Palestinians in the military courts are extremely exaggerated, both in their scope compared with the size of the population and its economic ability,” Combatants for Peace told Haaretz.

Itamar Feigenbaum, a member of the group that connects former Israeli soldiers and former Palestinian security prisoners, got the idea to submit its request based on the Freedom of Information Law after a Palestinian member said his nephew was fined 7,000 shekels – in exchange for a prison term. He was charged with being part of an “illegal” student organization and helping organize a reconciliation meeting between Fatah and Hamas. “Our friend made enormous efforts to raise the sum so that his nephew wouldn’t go to prison – it’s a very high sum, certainly in Palestinian terms,” Feigenbaum said. “During our activity in the Jordan Valley, for example, we found that fines to release tractors that the Civil Administration had confiscated from farmers [forbidding them to cultivate their land] sometimes reached 4,000 shekels. Fines are part of the Palestinians’ life under a military regime, and there’s no reason the Israeli and Palestinian public shouldn’t know how high they are.” (Haaretz 15 January 2019)

- The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) will end all of its projects in the occupied West Bank and the besieged Gaza Strip on January 31st following the US administration’s decision to cut funding to the Palestinians. The shut down on January 31st matches the implementation of the Anti Terrorism Clarification Act, a bill signed into law last October by the Trump administration, which creates liability for the Palestinian Authority (PA) should it accept any foreign assistance from the US government – effectively shutting down all USAID programming. (IMEMC 19 January 2019)

• The Israeli High Court of Justice ordered the government on Wednesday to justify the partial closure of sections of the City of David National Park, in East Jerusalem's Silwan neighborhood, in what critics say blocks Palestinian residents' access to open areas. The park, located just outside Jerusalem's Old City, is closed on Saturdays, holidays and evenings, unlike regulations for all other national parks in the country. It is managed by the Israel Nature and Parks Authority, a government agency, but operated by right-wing settler organization Elad. Four years ago, The INPA and Elad set up fences and gates that closed off to the public parts it in Silwan, which had been accessible until then. Following that move, attorney Eitay Mack petitioned to the High Court on behalf of Emek Shaveh, a nongovernmental organization of archeologists who "defend cultural heritage rights... of all communities," and Palestinian residents of the neighborhood, parts of which already taken over by settler organizations. The petitioners claim the closure follows the closure of other public areas in Silwan for archeological or tourism purposes, such as the areas surrounding the Gihon Spring near the City of David in the 1990s and the Siloam Pool, at the southern end of the national park, in 2005, which had both been used freely by residents. At first, the Nature and Parks Authority said the latest closure was for security reasons and following incidents of vandalism at the site. But Attorney General Avichai Mendelblit told the High Court that no evidence of official complaints about such vandalism had been presented. The decision to close the areas on Saturdays was made by the INPA and Elad, without consulting with the Israel Police and the Israel Antiquities Authority. About a year ago, the High Court justices instructed the attorney general to present feasible alternatives for open spaces for the neighborhood residents instead of the one that had been closed off. The alternatives presented by the state, however, were privately-owned or problematic and unsuitable for public use in other ways. Emek Shaveh and Silwan residents say this reflects a process of “Hebronization” of the neighborhood, referring to the gradual take-over of Palestinian lands and limiting of public spaces by settler organizations in the West Bank city of Hebron. The justices gave the state and Elad 60 days to submit their responses. (Haaretz 19 January 2019)

- Dozens of Israeli occupation Army (IOA) attacked dozens of Palestinian detainees in Ofar Israeli prison, near Ramallah in the central West Bank, and fired many rubber-coated steel bullets, gas bombs and concussion grenades. They also hit the detainees with batons and used military dogs to attack them, wounding more than 100 detainees. The IOA began invasions and massive searches of the detainees’ rooms in the early morning hours, and assaulted many detainees, leading to protests by the imprisoned men. The IOA started firing rubber-coated steel bullets, gas bombs and concussion grenades, in addition to striking many detainees with batons and unleashing their dogs on them. At least 100 detainees were injured, mainly after being shot with rubber-coated steel bullets from close range in their cells, before a number of them were moved to several Israeli hospitals. Most of the wounded detainees were later returned to the prison, while around twenty of them remained hospitalized for further treatment. At least three cells were burned during the Israeli invasions into them, possibly resulting from the firing of tear gas canisters at close range when the special prison forces stormed many of the cells. The invasions into the cells came just one day after the IOA stormed sections 17 and 15 of the prison, forcing the detainees out, and assaulted them while searching their rooms. - Israel’s Minister of Internal Security, Gilad Erdan, has called for international observers to be expelled from Hebron, claiming the mission is “hostile to Israel rather than a neutral force, and harmful to both the Israeli occupation Army (IOA) stationed in Hebron and the Jewish settlers that live there”. Erdan sent a letter to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, demanding that he end the mandate of the Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH), sending him a secret police report “with data to back up his assertion”. In November 2018, Netanyahu said he would review the mission’s status in December. The TIPH – a civilian observer mission which has been present in Hebron since 1997 – has a mandate which is renewed every six months by the Palestinian Authority (PA) and Israel. The mission’s current mandate ends in 14 days, which likely explains the timing of Erdan’s appeal. (IMEMC 21 January 2019)

- More than 250 Palestinians were killed by Israeli army gunfire and over 23,000 were injured since the start of the Great March of Return protests in the Gaza Strip on March 30 until the end of last year. Since 30 March 2018, the Gaza Strip has witnessed a significant increase in Palestinian casualties in the context of mass demonstrations and other activities along Israel’s perimeter fence with Gaza, taking place as part of the Great March of Return, as well as during hostilities and access related incidents. OCHA said 254 Palestinians were killed in Gaza between March 30 and December 31, among them 180 killed during the March of Return protests at the Gaza border with Israel and the rest in other circumstances but also by Israeli gunfire. Among those killed 44 were children and four were women. In addition, 23,603 Palestinians were injured during the same period, almost all of them during the March of Return protests and included 5183 boys, 464 girls and 1437 women. The largest number of fatalities and injuries occurred in May (80 deaths and 5981 injuries) during mass protests against the relocation of the United States embassy in Israel from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem. (OCHA OPT, WAFA 21 January 2019)

- Israel’s Minister of Internal Security, Gilad Erdan, has called for international observers to be expelled from Hebron, claiming the mission is “hostile to Israel rather than a neutral force, and harmful to both the Israeli soldiers stationed in Hebron and the Jewish settlers that live there”. Erdan sent a letter to Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, demanding that he end the mandate of the Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH), sending him a secret police report “with data to back up his assertion”. The letter read: “It is no wonder that a force, composed of policemen from a hostile Islamic state such as Turkey and pro-Palestinian countries that sponsor boycotts [of Israel] such as Sweden and Norway, interferes with IDF soldiers and police, creates friction with the settlers, cooperates with radical organizations and promotes the delegitimization of Israel.” Erdan continued: “It is [therefore] right and proper for the Israeli government to prevent the continued activity of this ‘temporary’ force acting to harm Israel.” In November, Netanyahu said he would review the mission’s status in December. - In a battle between settlers and Palestinians, a small house in East Jerusalem has become a property worth 12 million shekels ($3.27 million). A settler organization and a Palestinian family offered on Monday 12 million shekels in a public auction to buy the 72-square-meter house in the Palestinian neighborhood of Sheikh Jarrah. The auction was supposed to be resumed on Wednesday, after being halted in wake of the high price. Locals are unsure what the effects will be. The public sale concerns a three-room house, one of which is a windowless storage room, at 23 Dalman Street in Sheikh Jarrah. Like many houses in the area, the land on which it was built belonged to a Jewish family until 1948. Palestinian families moved into the area decades ago and many pay rental fees to the Jewish heirs or to the Custodian General. The Abdel Razeq family has lived at this address for decades. Over the past decade, settler organizations, in particular Jerusalem city councilman Arieh King’s Israel Land Fund, has contacted many such land heirs, and with their consent, the organization files suit on their behalf to evict the Palestinian families. In the case of the house where the Abdel Razeq family lives, the Jewish heirs got into a conflict over the fate of the building. The Family Court ruled that the building should be put in receivership and sold to the highest bidder, with the proceeds to be divided among the heirs. The tender was advertised last week in the Israel Hayom newspaper and prospective bidders were given a tour of the property. On Wednesday, the bidders gathered in the office of the receiver, attorneys Avraham Nagar and Yariv Peleg (who is also one of the heirs to the property). Before long, only King and the Palestinian family were still bidding, and continually driving up the price they were willing to pay. Settler activist King had worked to raise donations to buy the house and started to attack the heirs. He wrote on Facebook on Wednesday that this it was “a black day for the Jewish people. A Jewish family is negotiating with the enemies of the Jewish people to sell a property that the family’s grandfather purchased a hundred years ago in East Jerusalem.” He claimed that the Abdel Razeq family’s attorney offered 900,000 shekels, and the Israel Land Fund offered 20 percent more. “The lawyer kept the price rising the whole day at by eight in the evening we’d reached the incredible price of 11 million shekels! I am sure that the family members (which include a bereaved family) don’t know what their lawyer did/is doing,” he added. King also publicized the name of the Jewish family in an attempt to reach them without going through the lawyers. Finally, King said Wednesday night after consulting with Rabbi Shmuel Eliyahu, he had decided to withdraw from the deal. This means that the Palestinians can now buy the house on condition they are able to raise the money. King continued his scathing attack on the heirs who had put the house up for sale this way. “I am full of shame that people act this way about a place that their grandfather bought out of Zionist motives and a place where soldiers paid with their lives and were wounded, and they sell it just to make another profit,” he said. It’s clear to all that the Abdel Razeq family cannot raise that kind of money on its own and will need outside help. Some neighborhood activists believe the Palestinian Authority has promised to help the family buy the house. Palestinian activists in Sheikh Jarrah are divided as to how the high price will affect settler activity there. Some fear the price could spur more heirs to locate property in the neighborhood in order to sell it. Others hope the high price will deter settler organizations who would struggle to raise that kind of money for every house. “It’s madness,” says local resident Saleh Diab. “It’s scary because now people will come to King and say they want to throw us out because the prices are sky high.” (Haaretz 23 January 2019)

- Israel’s Strategic Affairs Ministry accused the European Union of funding organizations that support the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) movement to the tune of millions, urging Brussels to make any financial aid to NGOs contingent on an explicit commitment to opposing boycotts of Israel. According to Hebrew-language news outlets, Israel’s Ministry of Strategic Affairs published a 34-page new report, stating that certain non-governmental groups that support the Palestinian-led boycott movement against Israel receive EU funding. The report entitled “The Money Trail: European Union Financing of Organizations Promoting Boycotts against the State of Israel,” read that the EU had given more than €5 million to at least 10 NGOs that promote boycotts against Israel. The report also showed that two prominent pro-Palestinian NGOs, al-Haq and al-Mezan, were awarded a multiyear grant of €750,000 in 2018. The report stated that funding for “seemingly legitimate causes enables BDS-promoting NGOs to channel other funds to advance the delegitimization and boycott of the State of Israel.” The report argued that the fact that the EU funds groups that back up BDS, “even if the funds are designated for other purposes, gives those organizations ‘enhanced legitimacy,’ which helps them secure grants for anti-Israel activity.” In the report, Israel also urged the EU to “immediately implement” certain recommendations, including stipulating that any future funding to NGOs be “contingent on a commitment not to promote” boycotts of Israel. The report further quoted a December 2018 report by the European Court of Auditors (ECA), the EU’s financial-audit body, which urged the EU to be more transparent about its funding of NGOs, referring to how the funds were “distributed or spent.” The EU responded by saying that it opposes BDS, however, will continue to defend freedom of speech, noting that it similarly rejects actions to “close the space” for civil society groups. In addition, in response to the ministry’s accusations, a spokesperson for the EU’s delegation to Israel noted that the ECA’s report found the union’s selection of NGO-led projects “to be generally transparent” and in accordance with international transparency standards. The spokesperson added that EU’s opposition to the BDS movement has not changed. “While it (EU) upholds its policy of clearly distinguishing between the territory of the State of Israel and the territories occupied by it since 1967, the EU rejects any attempts to isolate Israel and does not support calls for a boycott.” The spokesperson stressed that the EU does not fund actions that are “related to boycott activities,” however, noting, “the EU stands firm in protecting freedom of expression and freedom of association in line with the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union.” (Maannews, YNET 27 January 2019)

- A prominent Jewish organization in Canada lost its status as a charity for tax purposes after the Canadian government accused it of supporting the Israeli military and donating to Israeli settlements in the West Bank, according to a report published on Monday in the Canadian news website “Global News.” The report stated that a charity called “Beth Oloth”, which had a revenue of tens of millions of dollars in 2017, lost its charity status after the Canadian government came to a conclusion that “some of its activities were not charitable under Canadian law, such as ‘increasing the efficiency and effectiveness of the Israeli armed forces.’” One example mentioned in the report is that the charity group supported Israeli “mechinot”, a network of informal education institutions that offer something similar to a gap year to 18 year-old Israelis ahead of their military service. There are dozens of mechinot in Israel that represent different ideological, religious and political factions in society, and they differ in the level of involvement by military authorities in the education and training offered to their students. According to the report, the Canadian Revenue Agency saw Beth Oloth’s support of mechinot as problematic, stating that “It is our position that these pre-army mechinot exist to provide support to the Israel Defense Forces, and that funds forwarded to these mechinot are therefore in support of foreign armed forces.” Beth Oloth claimed in response that it only supported religious teachings in mechinot, and that this activity has nothing to do with military affairs. The revenue agency rejected this claim, stating that “our position remains that support for pre-army mechinot, which includes support for teachers, represents support for the armed forces of another country, which is not charitable in law.” The revenue agency also criticized Beth Oloth for sending donations to Israeli settlements in the West Bank, stating that “providing assistance to Israeli settlements in the occupied territories serves to encourage and enhance the permanency of the infrastructure and settlements and therefore is contrary to Canada’s public policy and international law on this issue.” (Haaretz 28 January 2019)

- Israeli Prime Minister, Benjamin Netanyahu, announced that Israel will not be renewing the mandate of the Temporary International Presence in Hebron (TIPH). TIPH has been monitoring the southern occupied West Bank’s city for twenty years; the group’s mandate is renewed every six months; their current mandate expires by the end of the this month. According to Israeli news outlets, Netanyahu said in a statement “We will not allow the continuation of an international force that acts against us,” TIPH is an international civilian observer group that, according to its mandate, is tasked with “monitoring and reporting efforts to maintain normal life in the city of Hebron, thus creating a sense of security among the Palestinians in Hebron.” It also reports alleged human rights abuses and violations of accords in the city between Israel and Palestinians. Observers for the group come from Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Switzerland, Italy, and Turkey. TIPH has roughly a dozen staff operating locally and an additional 64 working abroad. The Old City of Hebron is under full military control by Israel imposing restrictions on the movement of Palestinians living there. (Maannews, Haaretz, 29 January 2019)

- Amnesty International Slams Travel Firms for Featuring Israeli-run Sites in West Bank, East Jerusalem: The archaeological attraction situated just west of the Israeli settlement of Shiloh draws about 60,000 visitors a year, the vast majority of them evangelical Christians known to ascribe great importance to places mentioned in the Bible. Shiloh is identified in the Old Testament as the site of the Tabernacle and the Ark of the Covenant – the main center of worship for the ancient Israelites before the First Temple was built in Jerusalem. There are excavations at the site, a gift shop where locally made olive oil and wine can be purchased, and a giant lookout tower that houses an audio-visual center and small museum. Visitors who rely on the official guides and explanations can’t help but come away feeling inspired by the Jews who returned to these parts to reclaim a swath of land possessing such great historical and religious significance. But that’s because they will likely not hear the less savory side of the story: The part about the Palestinians who had to be evicted from their homes so this place could be turned into a tourist attraction. A group of local and foreign journalists visiting Tel Shiloh recently had the rare opportunity to stand at the site and hear an alternative narrative. It was presented not by the official settler guides, but instead by local Palestinians and representatives of human rights groups. They learned, for example, that the settlement of Shiloh, established in 1978, was later expanded to include Palestinian farmlands that contained the ancient ruins – not a top fact that settlers here like to brag about. They also heard how 10 new settlements had been set up near Shiloh since then, and how thousands of acres of Palestinian land had been confiscated in order to enable their construction. Basher Muammar, a resident of the adjacent village of Qaryut, told them how Palestinians are banned from using a nearby road that passes close to the archaeological site and, as a result, must take an 18-kilometer (11 mile) detour to travel a distance of 1 kilometer from their homes to reach this point. “We have become so isolated that people are leaving the village,” he says. “Many are selling their land and homes and moving to Ramallah.” The press tour was organized by Amnesty International, ahead of the launch of a new campaign aimed at getting online travel and booking companies to stop featuring Israeli-run tourism destinations in the occupied territories on their websites. (The new campaign is a spin-off of one launched more than 18 months ago to mark the 50th anniversary of the Israeli occupation.) “By listing hotels, bed and breakfasts, and tourist attractions like this one here, these companies are complicit in human rights violations carried out against Palestinians living around these settlements,” Laith Abu Zeyad, a regional campaigner for the human rights organization, told the group. The campaign, titled Destination: Occupation, targets the largest international online travel and booking companies: Airbnb, Booking.com, Expedia and TripAdvisor. Last November, Airbnb announced that it planned to remove around 200 listings in Israeli settlements from its website. As of this week, though, it had yet to implement its new policy. As part of the new campaign, Amnesty International is releasing a report on Wednesday with figures on the number of Israeli settlement listings on the websites of each of the four companies. It also includes case studies of how Israeli tourism initiatives in the occupied territories are impacting nearby Palestinian villages, including those located near Shiloh. The report notes that Airbnb did not extend its new policy to East Jerusalem, where it still has about 100 listings – “even though this, too, is occupied territory.” The online property rental company has not explained why it made this exception. It found that Booking.com lists 45 Israeli-owned hotels and rentals, Expedia lists nine and TripAdvisor lists more than 70 different attractions (including the archaeological site at Tel Shiloh), tours, restaurants, cafés, hotels and rental apartments in the West Bank and East Jerusalem. “All four companies claim to operate under high ethical values and respect for the rule of law,” says the report. “However, none of these standards appears to influence the companies’ decisions in relation to settlement listings. In doing business with settlements, all four companies are contributing to, and profiting from, the maintenance, development and expansion of illegal settlements, which amount to war crimes under international law.” The report notes that the promotion of Israeli settlements as tourist destinations “also has the effect of ‘normalizing’ and legitimizing to the public what is recognized under international law as an illegal situation.” According to the report, the companies often mislead tourists by not mentioning on their websites that specific destinations are located beyond Israel’s internationally recognized borders, and in some cases even refer to them as being located in Israel. Israel has allocated considerable resources in recent years to developing and expanding tourism in the settlements. According to the report, there are “political and ideological” reasons for these investments. “Settler groups supported by the Israeli government emphasize the Jewish people’s historic connections to the region,” it says. “Israel has constructed many of its settlements close to archaeological sites to make the link between the modern State of Israel and its Jewish history explicit. At the same time, Israel downplays and ignores the significance of non-Jewish periods at archaeological and historic sites.” The report states that the government will sometimes designate locations as tourist sites in order to justify the takeover of Palestinian land. “This has resulted in forced evictions as well as restrictions on the ability of Palestinian residents to establish or expand their homes or use land for agricultural purposes,” it says. All four online tourism companies have listings in Kfar Adumim – a settlement located some 10 kilometers east of Jerusalem. TripAdvisor also lists a national park, museum, desert tour and Bible-themed attraction nearby. “The development and expansion of the settlement and these attractions has had a harmful impact on numerous human rights of the neighboring Palestinian Bedouin community of Khan al-Ahmar, who have lost access to grazing land, have been under pressure to leave the area for years and are threatened with the imminent demolition of their home,” the report says. Kfar Adumim is one of five examples of settlements cited in the report that are promoted by the online booking and travel companies. Susya is another. Airbnb lists one property in this settlement, located in the South Hebron Hills, while TripAdvisor lists a winery there along with an archaeological site and visitor attraction. “Israel forcibly evicted the Palestinian residents of Khirbet Susiya to make way for the visitor attraction,” the report says, “and the construction of the settlement resulted in them losing access to farmland.” In Hebron, a Palestinian city with a small Jewish settlement in its midst, TripAdvisor lists both a guided tour and museum run by settlers, while Airbnb lists one property. “Hebron’s settlements are a main driver of a wide range of human rights violations suffered by the Palestinian population of the city,” the report says. It also notes that TripAdvisor prominently features and operates as a booking agent for the City of David – a popular tourist attraction located in Silwan, a Palestinian neighborhood in East Jerusalem. The site is managed by Elad, an organization dedicated to “Judaizing” the Arab part of the city. “Hundreds of Palestinian residents are threatened with forced eviction, as Elad plans to expand the City of David to include residences for more settlers,” the report says. “Human rights that have been violated include the rights to adequate housing and to an adequate standard of living.” As the report was being written, Airbnb still listed five properties in Shiloh and surrounding settlements in the northern part of the West Bank. Booking.com listed one, and TripAdvisor listed the archaeological site as well as tour guides who specialize in the region. “The establishment and expansion of these settlements has had a harmful impact on the human rights of residents of neighboring Palestinian villages Qaryut and Jalud,” the report says. “Residents have lost access to farmland and the main road leading to their home. They often come under attack from settlers.” Indeed, a 38-year-old Palestinian man was killed in clashes with settlers in the area this past weekend. Amnesty International notes that it provided all four companies with the opportunity to respond to its findings and answer a series of questions. Two companies, Airbnb and TripAdvisor, did not reply at all. Expedia said in its response, quoted in the report: “Expedia Group is committed to providing transparency to our customers when traveling to disputed territories globally, and we appreciate Amnesty International bringing its concerns on this complex issue to our attention. In the Occupied Palestinian Territories, we identify these accommodations as ‘Israeli Settlement’ located in Palestinian territory. “We are currently reviewing the transparency of our display not only in the Occupied Palestinian Territories, but as well as other disputed territories globally to ensure that travelers have the information necessary to make the travel decisions that best suit their needs,” it added. Booking.com said in its response that there are no “clearly defined and applicable laws or sanctions” that prevent it from advertising properties in the settlements. “Everything we do in terms of how we display information on Booking.com is focused on the customer and always in accordance with applicable law,” it said. “Our geographic labeling of properties gives full transparency to customers about where an accommodation is located, and we continuously update and optimize this information. By marking properties concerned as being in ‘Israeli settlements,’ we provide transparency to anybody looking (or not looking) for accommodations in these territories,” it added. Amnesty International called Airbnb’s announcement that it would no longer list properties in West Bank settlements “welcome, but only a first step.” “The company must implement this announcement, it must reflect its commitment in a revised public policy, and it must redress the harm it has contributed to. Airbnb must also extend its commitment to Israeli settlements in East Jerusalem,” it said. Emek Shaveh, an Israeli anti-occupation organization founded and run by a group of archaeologists, has been engaged in a legal battle in recent years aimed at blocking settler attempts to undertake further expansion of Tel Shiloh. As a result of two separate petitions it has filed (along with local Palestinians and another Israeli human rights organization), plans to build a new 11,000-square-meter tourism complex at the site have been temporarily frozen. Accusing the settlers of using Tel Shiloh for political purposes, Emek Shaveh CEO Yonatan Mizrahi says implementation of the plan would have caused great damage to a unique archaeological site. Roaming around the grounds of Tel Shiloh when we visited were some local and foreign tourists: A small Christian evangelical group from South Korea; a few dozen boys participating in a pre-military gap year program; and three Orthodox Jews speaking American-accented English. Outside the gift shop, Mizrahi points to a large map of the Binyamin region where Shiloh is located. Settler-operated tourist sites dominate the map, as do the adjacent settlements. The Palestinian towns and villages appear as small, faded dots – even though most of them are much larger and more populous than the settlements. “This map says a lot about what kind of story is being told here,” notes Mizrahi wryly. - 20.56% increase of Jews living in Judea and Samaria: Judea and Samaria Jewish Population Stats Report is currently in the stage of production, to be released at the end of January. Every January, for the last nine years, former Member of Knesset Yaakov “Ketzaleh” Katz has published the Judea and Samaria Jewish Population Statistics Report, based on the population registry of Israel’s Ministry of the Interior. The report reveals tremendous population growth over the last decade, currently totaling almost half a million Jewish residents in the region. The 2018 raw data has already been processed into a complete population breakdown by town (127 in total) and regional bloc (11 in total), and includes comparisons for each town from previous years. The report is currently in the stage of production, to be released at the end of January. The report shows a 20.56% increase of Jews living in Judea and Samaria in the last 5 years, or an actual growth of 76,614 people. (INN 30 January 2019)

- The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) has ended all assistance to Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and besieged Gaza Strip. The decision was linked to a January 31st deadline, set by new US legislation, under which foreign aid recipients would be more exposed to anti-terrorism lawsuits. The deadline also sees the end of some $60 million in U.S. aid for the Palestinian security forces. The Anti-Terrorism Clarification Act (ATCA), which was passed by the US Congress in 2018, empowers Americans to sue foreign aid recipients in US courts over alleged complicity in “acts of war.” (IMEMC 2 February 2019)

- Israel’s Defense Ministry announced that it has begun the construction of an upgraded security barrier along the Gaza Strip on Sunday. “On Thursday, we began working on the final component of the barrier project along the Gaza border,” said Brig.-Gen. Eran Ophir, head of the army’s fence-building administration. “The barrier is unique and especially suited to threats from the Gaza Strip and will provide a maximum response to prevent entry into Israeli territory.” The new barrier will be 65 kilometers long, stretching along the route of the border from the new sea barrier near Zikim beach in the north to Kerem Shalom crossing in the south. Made from galvanized steel, it will weigh about 20,000 tons and will reach a height of about six meters. The project is being carried out by the Defense Ministry’s Engineering and Construction Department and the Border and Sewage Administration. The smart-fence is the above-ground part of Israel’s underground barrier, which has a system of advanced sensor and monitoring devices to detect tunnels. The Defense Ministry stated that the work on the underground barrier “will continue in parallel to the work on the fence.” At the beginning of the year, Israel announced that the naval barrier meant to stave off Hamas infiltrations from the sea is nearing completion, seven months after work began. The 200-meter sea barrier is made up of three layers, including one below the sea level, which is lined with seismic detectors and other tools, a layer of armored stone and a third layer in the form of a mound. In addition to the three layers, a six meter (20 foot) smart-fence surrounds the breakwater to provide a final security measure. “The barrier is similar to the one on the Egyptian border, but it has significant improvements and includes innovative security elements,” the Defense Ministry said in a statement, adding that the smart-fence has been specially adapted to security threats and will have an additional component for the defense of communities in the Gaza border vicinity. “At the end of last week, we began the construction of the barrier on the Gaza border,” said Prime Minister and Defense Minister Benjamin Netanyahu. “The barrier will prevent the infiltration of terrorists from Gaza into our territory. Those in Gaza have to understand that if they do not keep quiet, we will not hesitate to act.” The border with Gaza is Israel’s most explosive, with 1,000 rockets fired toward southern Israel in 2018 and more than 10 months of violent protests along fence, with Palestinians launching incendiary aerial devices and throwing explosive devices toward troops. Gazans have also been cutting through the fence, infiltrating from the Hamas-run enclave into southern Israel. Early on Sunday morning, the IDF arrested five Palestinians who infiltrated into Israel from the southern Gaza Strip. Armed with knives, the men were arrested and transferred to Shin Bet
The fence along the Egyptian border, which is similar to the one which will be built along the Gazan border, has slashed almost completely the number of illegal African migrants arriving in Israel. The number of infiltrations from the Sinai – with 14,669 infiltrations in 2010 to 213 in 2015, to 14 in 2016 – prompted authorities to raise the height from five meters to eight meters along a 17-kilometer stretch. There have been no infiltrations from Sinai since. (JPOST 3 February 2019)

- Israel began construction on the over-ground portion of the Gaza border barrier that will connect to the under-construction sea barrier aimed at preventing the movement of the Hamas military wing out of the coastal enclave and into Israel. The Israeli Defense Ministry confirmed, that the over-ground section of the barrier will be 65 kilometers (40 miles) long and will be six meters (20 feet) high. The barrier, estimated to cost 3 billion shekels ($833 million), will include a concrete wall fitted with sensors and reaching dozens of meters deep into the ground and standing six meters high from ground level. - The Israeli military courts have imposed more than 60,000 Shekels in fines on Palestinian children who were detained by the soldiers and held in Ofer Israeli prison. 57 children were moved to Ofer in January; 39 of them were taken prisoner from their homes during dawn invasions by the Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) in several parts of the occupied West Bank, including Jerusalem. ten children were detained while walking in their towns and neighborhoods, and three others were taken prisoner at several military roadblocks, in addition to five children who were summoned for interrogation at military bases and were taken prisoner. One of the detained children was shot and injured by the soldiers before he was detained, and at least seventeen of the detained children were subject to assaults and torture during their arrest or while under interrogation. Israeli courts imposed prison terms on 28 of the detained children, and ordered one of them, identified as Laith Abu Kharma, 17, under Administrative Detention, without charges or trial. - The Education Ministry is embroiled in a row with a right-wing NGO over the highly political content it is including in textbooks. The Kohelet Policy Forum has produced a civics textbook for Israel's Arab sector in Arabic that does not include the terms "Al-Quds" and "Palestine." As a result, the Education Ministry has ordered the Kohelet Policy Forum to change the terminology to be inclusive of the Arab sector's history and beliefs, and ministry officials accused the NGO of using the new textbook to promote a conservative right-wing agenda. The textbook at the heart of the row is a new translated edition of "The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy," by Prof. Avraham Diskin. The book is set to be published in the near future after a delay of several years, while its Hebrew edition is already being taught in several schools. Some of the translators working for the NGO are from the Arab sector, although the Education Ministry team that has final say on the textbook's content does not include members of the community. A senior official in charge of the education system in the Arab sector called the terminology in the textbook offensive and detached from reality. "The book's translation is volatile and I'm certain it will spark anger among students in the Arab community," the official said. Meanwhile, the textbook "To be citizens in Israel" by David Shahar is the only book that is currently being taught in secondary schools in the Arab sector. Its translation from Hebrew into Arabic was funded by the Education Ministry. Dr. Hadar Lifshitz, a member of the Kohelet Policy Forum and a lecturer in public policy who led the translation project, said that Diskin's book presents facts in an objective manner, and avoids making ideological statements. "The previous curriculum doubted the legitimacy of the nation-state of the Jewish people, while the new curriculum has bolstered that legitimacy. We worked on the translation project for almost two years," Lifshitz said. "Kohelet Policy Forum is perceived as having anti-Arab sentiments, but this is not the case. We undertook this project after attempts to thwart the Education Ministry's funding were made. Diskin clearly instructed us to adhere to the book's Hebrew edition, however, the Education Ministry influenced the book's content," he said. In response, Diskin condemned the delays, which he said cost him personally. "I've already lost a lot of money on this project,” he said. "I hope the textbook in Arabic is published as soon as possible." The Education Ministry said in a statement: "The ministry doesn't produce textbooks written through private publishing house. The textbook 'The Last Days in Israel: Understanding the New Israeli Democracy,' by Prof. Avraham Diskin was approved to be taught in Hebrew as well as in Arabic. The ministry declined to comment on the fact that the Kohelet Policy Forum funded the translation project, or why it has so far failed to approve a civics textbook in Arabic. The ministry also declined not comment on why there was no representation from members of the Arab sector in the panel approving the translation of Diskin’s book. (YNETNEWS 9 February 2019)

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu announced Sunday that Israel will implement a new law that mandates the withholding of monies collected on behalf of the Palestinian Authority, in order to offset salaries paid by the Ramallah government to terrorists or their families. Speaking at the beginning of the Cabinet meeting on Sunday, Netanyahu stated that preparatory work will be concluded by next weekend and that the Security Cabinet will vote on implementation of the “Deductions Law” move next Sunday. "Let nobody doubt, the funds will be deducted at the start of next week," Netanyahu declared. The law mandates deduction of an amount equal to terrorists’ salaries from the taxes collected by Israel on behalf of the Palestinian Authority, and comes as part of an effort to force the PA to end its “pay to slay” policy of institutional incitement and support for terrorism against Israelis and Jews. The stipends are paid out in varying amounts in accordance with the severity of the crime and the length of the sentence to be served. The more violent and lethal the attack, the higher the monthly stipend. Payments are made to the families of those who die while perpetrating terrorist attacks. Israel transfers NIS 8.5 billion (more than $2.4 billion) in tax payments to the PA annually. The PA’s budget in 2018 stood at NIS 18.5 billion ($5.2 billion) — with at least seven percent allocated toward monthly salaries for terrorists and their families in the government’s “pay to slay” program — the so-called “Prisoners and Martyrs’ Fund.” In its 2018 budget, the PA increased its funding of those payments and allocated $360 million for the Prisoners and Martyrs Fund, which disperses payment to imprisoned terrorists, released terrorists and the families of dead terrorists. Under Israel’s new legislation, the Defense Ministry is required to produce a report at the end of each year detailing the funds paid by the Palestinian Authority government via the Prisoners and Martyrs Fund to incarcerated terrorists and to their families of those who were killed. The financial penalty mandated by the Deduction Law will be determined by the annual Defense Ministry report. The law mandates the deduction with no options for flexibility, nor is there any option for the government to revisit the decision each year on whether or not to make the deduction, based on diplomatic and other considerations. MKs Elazar Stern and Avi Dichter, who co-sponsored the law, stated Sunday that they welcome the enactment of the law, and that “it will clarify to the PA that there is a price for financially supporting terrorists, and we will collect it. We will act in any way possible to deter the terrorists.” The PA leadership has vowed to proceed with its policy of paying terrorists and supporting their families, “to their last penny,” as one official stated after the Israeli bill was voted into law. The Palestinian Authority leadership also threatened not to take any of the funds transferred from Israel if the sums paid out to terrorists are cut from the transfers. The sum that stands to be deducted equals hundreds of millions of shekels at this point, due to the numerous terror attacks that have been carried out with the encouragement and subsequent support of the PA government. • Digital companies are revolutionizing how the world does tourism. Corporations like Airbnb, Booking.com, Expedia and TripAdvisor, which dominate the multi-billion-dollar global online tourism industry, have become huge success. These companies all also list numerous hotels, B&Bs, attractions or tours in Israeli settlements in the Occupied Palestinian Territories (OPT). They are doing so despite knowing that Israel’s settlements are illegal under international law, and a war crime. (Amnesty 11 February 2019)

• The National Bureau for Defending Land and Resisting Settlements said, in its weekly report, that, according to data published by the Israeli Central Bureau of Statistics, the government of Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu has established, during the past decade, 7 new settlements in the occupied West Bank, including six “settlement towns” and one settlement bloc named “Modi’in,” in addition to a “settlement town” in occupied Jerusalem, all of this on top of the expansion of existing illegal settlements and outposts. Within the same context, a recent report issued by Israeli rights group B’Tselem stated that the Israeli Supreme Court is now legitimizing Jewish settlements in the occupied West Bank, including East Jerusalem, in contravention of international law.
According to B’Tselem, Israel has established 2 judicial systems, i.e. a civilian system for the settlers, and a military one for the Palestinians. The report confirmed that the “supreme” administration adopts the structural schemes of the British Mandate, from 80 years ago, which does not suit the current situation. The Kerem Nebot organization stated that the Settlement Department granted housing loans, from public funds, for illegal construction, as is the case in the illegal settlement of Eli. Documents of the Israeli Land Registrar showed that, in 2010, the Histadrut branch of the Settlement Department granted a loan to a settler and his wife, although it is not allowed to give loans for illegal houses. To be sure, this is not the first time that the department has given such a loan for the purpose of building illegal settlements and outposts. It is known that, since the 1990s, the Settlement Department has helped to establish many settlement outposts throughout the occupied West Bank, including the Sakari farm, the Itamar farm, Giv’at Awalam and Amona, among others, and granted housing loans to settlers, from the public funds, as also is the case for the Itamar settlement, south of the city of Nablus. There is an additional plan to raise the number of settlers in the occupied West Bank to 2 million, and to build large settlements in all areas of the West Bank. Knesset speaker Adelstein, besides a number of ministers and members of the Knesset, signed a pledge that includes the housing of 2 million settlers, in the West Bank, a promise to work on “liberating” land in the West Bank, and to cancel the declaration of 2-state solution ahead of elections to be held next April 9th, 2019, in order to gain the votes of Israeli settlers. Within this context, Minister of Tourism Yariv Levin affirmed that the government’s goal is to accelerate settlement construction in the in the West Bank, in order to absorb one million Jewish settlers in the near future. On the other hand, the so-called “Central Area Commander” of the Israeli army, General Fadan, toured the settlement council of “Beit El,” in the West Bank, and, during the visit, surveyed the most important threats and security challenges facing the settlers, there, and the requirements needed to provide them with security. The so-called “Planning and Building Committee” of the municipality of occupied Jerusalem approved a plan to build 13 new settlement units west of Sheikh Jarrah, thus green-lighting the seizure of more than 1,000 dunams of agricultural land, including olive trees and Palestinian homes in Khallet Abed, to the southeast of Jerusalem. In the Nablus governorate, the archaeological site of Khirbat al-Qasr, located to the south of Jalod village, in the south of Nablus, has been attacked repeatedly by settlers, which led to the alteration of archaeological features in basin 18 of the village. Photos showed settlers uprooting dozens of olive, fig and almond trees planted in Khirbet-Qasr 100 years ago, and razing areas to celebrate, there. The “Khirbet-Qasr” is surrounded by three settlement outposts which include a number of caves and ancient water wells. The Khirbet-Qasr area is about 50 dunams in total area, in addition to hundreds of agricultural lands which surround it, and belongs to Ahmad Mah’d Salman Abbad. The occupation has prevented citizens from reaching this area since 2001, under the pretext that it is closed to the outposts. In the Salfit Governorate, a plan was uncovered to bulldoze hundreds of dunams of agricultural land, in the villages and towns, in order to expand settlements. The municipality of Kafel Hares received a plan to construct a sewage line that would pass through land belonging to a number of citizens north of Salfit, and to include the destruction of some 22 dunams of Palestinian land planted with olive trees. - Top companies face UN blacklist over operations in settlements: A number of prominent Israeli and international companies — among them Coca Cola and Teva — have been threatened with inclusion on a United Nations blacklist over their operations in Israeli settlements. One of the Israeli companies warned of its potential inclusion has appealed to Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu for government intervention. The UN Human Rights Council says it intends to release an updated blacklist of corporations operating directly or indirectly in West Bank settlements, East Jerusalem and on the Golan Heights. Major corporations including Africa Israel, Bank Hapoalim, Bank Leumi, Bezeq and Bezeq International, Coca Cola, Africa Israel, Teva, Egged, Mekorot and Elbit Systems have been informed they could be on the new list. Despite Israeli and American efforts to prevent it, the list is apparently set to be published at the 40th UN Human Rights Council session in Geneva in March. In 2016, the council approved a resolution to gather a blacklist of Israeli and international companies operating in the settlements. The list is updated annually. In January, senior officials from the Hot Telecommunication Systems Ltd. received letters from the Council stating that the cable company would be included in the blacklist since it provides its services beyond the Green Line. Hot CEO Tal Granot-Goldstein sent an urgent letter appealing to Netanyahu and Foreign Ministry Director-General Yuval Rotem in an effort to prevent Hot's inclusion on the list. "We believe the inclusion of Israeli companies in the UN Human Rights Council's blacklist might expose those companies to legal procedures, prompting international corporations to pull out of their investments in Israel. Therefore, we request that the Israeli government and the Foreign Ministry intervene to prevent the publication of this list. Handling this matter is a national interest of the utmost importance," Granot-Goldstein wrote. "To the best of our knowledge, additional Israeli companies have received similar warning letters. It is clear to us that by publishing its blacklist, the UN Human Rights Council aims to apply economic pressure on Israeli companies, while attempting to hurt their image and profits by shaming and threatening to expose them to legal procedures," she wrote.

Since former Chilean president Verónica Michelle Bachelet Jeria was appointed as the UN Human Rights Commissioner in 2018, efforts to produce the list have been intensified. The UNHRC has long been accused of an anti-Israel bias, and the US ended its membership last year over this issue. Israel is the only country in the world whose rights record comes up for discussion at every council session, under "Item 7" on the agenda. Item 7 on "Israel and the Occupied Palestinian Territories" has been part of the council's regular business almost as long as it has existed. The United States has opted to stay out of the Human Rights Council before: The George W. Bush administration opted against seeking membership when the council was created in 2006. The US only rejoined the body in 2009 under President Barack Obama. (YNETNEWS 12 February 2019)
The Council for Higher Education in Judea and Samaria is expected to approve Wednesday the establishment of a medical school at Ariel University in the West Bank, a day before the council dissolves and returns its mandate to the Council for Higher Education in Israel. Last Thursday the national council’s Planning and Budgeting Committee voted to reject the plan. During this tight time line, Attorney General Avichai Mendelblit must decide whether the West Bank council has the authority to make the decision and how to relate to the decision by the Planning and Budgeting Committee, which is responsible for funding higher education. The deans of Israel’s five existing medical schools said Monday that if the Ariel medical school does not open, they will increase their enrollment to accommodate the 70 students who were to study at Ariel. Fifty will study at Tel Aviv University, and the other 20 at the Technion – Israel Institute of Technology, subject to the allocation of the appropriate resources. Education Minister Naftali Bennett and Ariel University are claiming that the establishment of a faculty at Ariel is the only response to the serious shortage of doctors in Israel. But the deans, in a statement issued Sunday, said they had asked two years ago, before the discussions about Ariel began, whether there would be funding to increase the number of medical students by 100. They never received a response. “A number of months afterward, under pressure from various sources, the discussions about Ariel University’s request to open a medical school began,” the deans said. “Because the Planning and Budgeting Committee didn’t allocate the necessary funds, and did not order the allocation of hospital slots to train additional students, the deans were forced to freeze the plan to increase the number of students.” Ariel University argues that the deans of the five faculties did not fight hard enough to increase the number of new students. On Monday, the university said, “We are pleased that following Ariel’s plan to launch medical studies in October 2019, the older medical schools have woken up and are prepared now to increase the number of students, after years during which it was explained why they couldn’t do so by the Health Ministry, the state comptroller and the Planning and Budgeting Committee.” Last Thursday the Planning and Budgeting Committee voted 3-2 to reject Ariel University’s request to open a medical school, reversing a decision from July. The committee held a second vote after it was determined that one council member, Rivka Wadm any Shauman, was vying for a professorship at the university when she voted to support plans for the med school. The conflict of interest was first reported by Haaretz. In response to the decision Bennett said he would not give up and that would fight “the university cartel” until the medical school was opened. This battle apparently includes the effort to push the decision through the Council for Higher Education in Judea and Samaria, which has consistently supported Ariel University and most of whose members are right-wing. Prof. Amos Alshuler, chairman of the Council for Higher Education in Judea and Samaria, said Monday that a decision by the body under his leadership could override the decision by the Planning and Budgeting Committee. “We have to take it into account, but we have the power to decide. The Planning and Budgeting Committee decision is merely a recommendation.” While it would be unreasonable for the Council for Higher Education in Israel to make a decision that contradicts a Planning and Budgeting Committee vote, that’s not the case for the territories council, which operates under orders from the army’s Central Command commander. The territories council dissolves on Thursday under a law that was advanced by Bennett himself, which is presumably why there is pressure to have that council make the decision immediately. Sources familiar with the details say that transferring the final decision to the Council for Higher Education in Judea and Samaria would be puzzling. “Where were the supporters of this when the Planning and Budgeting Committee approved the establishment of the medical school?” said one. “Why didn’t they think then that the approval of the Council for Higher Education in Judea and Samaria was necessary?” They said that the chairwoman of the Planning and Budgeting Committee, Prof. Yaffa Zilbershats, “is meant to be a gatekeeper and prevent her role from being emptied of significance.” The Council for Higher Education in Israel said, “The issue has been turned over to the Justice Ministry and we will follow its instructions.” (Haaretz 12 February 2019)
• The Company for the Reconstruction and Development of the Jewish Quarter, in the Old City of Jerusalem, invested more than 200 million shekels ($55,288,940) into “settlement projects”, in Jerusalem’s Old City. The projects will include renovating the Tiferet Yisrael Synagogue, the Burnt House, and the Wohl Archaeological Museum. The company is reportedly working to upgrade the Jewish Quarter, which is located in the Old City, and will cost more than 200 million shekels. (IMEMC 18 February 2019)

• Israel decided to withhold $138 million (€122 million) in tax transfers to the Palestinian Authority, over its payments to prisoners jailed for attacks on Israelis. A statement from Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu’s office said the withheld cash would be equal to that paid by the PA last year to “terrorists imprisoned in Israel, to their families and to released prisoners.” (IMEMC 20 February 2019)

• Israel Has confiscated NIS 41,000,000 of the tax funds that it collects for the Palestinian Authority. The money was supposed to be transferred directly to the Palestinian Authority, according to the Oslo Accords of 1994. Under Oslo accords, Israel is responsible for collecting about $200 million each month in taxes, which it is supposed to pass on to the PA, the Palestinian government-in-waiting in the West Bank. The money belongs to the Palestinians but Israel has temporarily withheld it on several occasions in the past as a stick with which to beat the Palestinian leadership into line. Last week Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu belatedly implemented a law passed last summer that requires his officials to retain part of the taxes owed to the Palestinians – those that the PA transfers to political prisoners’ families as a monthly stipend. It echoes the Taylor Force Act, a law passed by the US Congress in 2016, that denies American economic aid to the PA until it stops sending those same stipends to 35,000 families of prisoners and those killed and maimed by the Israeli army. • The investigative committee of the United Nations Human Rights Council that has been looking into the 2018 Israeli attacks on Gaza protestors, in a report, said it found that Israeli forces had violated international law. The committee’s chairman, Santiago Canton, said, at the beginning of the session, that his panel had found that the vast majority of the Palestinian protestors were unarmed. When asked whether Israel intentionally shoots children and journalists, Council member Sara Hussein confirmed, saying the council believes Israel knew they were children and journalists, and shot them nonetheless. “There is no justification for shooting children and disabled people that pose no risk,” Hussein said. “While some deaths may have been examined by the Israeli Defense Forces’ internal ‘fact-finding assessment,’ criminal investigations were opened in only five cases, including the deaths of four children,” the report says. According to data in a United Nations report released last month and confirmed by Israeli officials, 295 Palestinians have been killed and about 6,000 wounded by live ammunition since the demonstrations’ inception. • The United States is scheduled to move ahead with a downgrade of its mission to the Palestinians, by merging its Jerusalem consulate with the embassy to Israel. US Secretary of State Mike Pompeo, said the announcement to merge the two offices in October was intended to improve “efficiency and effectiveness” and did not constitute a change in policy. But Palestinian leaders have seen the decision as yet another move against them by US President Donald Trump’s administration, which they froze contact with after his 2017 decision to recognize Jerusalem as Israel’s capital. A date for the merger of the consulate into the embassy had not been announced, but a State Department official told AFP news agency, on condition of anonymity, that it “is expected to take place on March 4”. The Jerusalem consulate general, which has acted independently as a de facto embassy to the Palestinians since the Oslo accords of the 1990s, will be replaced by a new Palestinian affairs unit within the embassy. Placing the consulate under the authority of the embassy could be seen as an American recognition of Israeli control over the occupied West Bank and East Jerusalem. (IMEMC 4 March 2019)

- Israeli authorities banned Palestinian mosque employees from playing the Muslim call to prayer through the speakers of the Ibrahimi Mosque in the southern occupied West Bank city of Hebron 44 times in February. - The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) and the Israeli Civil Administration cut off water to dozens of Palestinians living in communities of Bardala village, in the Jordan Valley, northern occupied West Bank. The IOA cut off water supply for 1,800-2,000 dunams of Palestinian agricultural lands that must be continuously irrigated. Israel claims the water sources supplying residents with water are illegal, stressing that the water comes from water wells in the village, and inside Palestinian lands. (IMEMC 7 March 2019)

- A national framework agreement was signed on Monday afternoon at Jerusalem’s City Hall, stating that 23,000 new housing units will be developed in the coming five years in the city. The strategic agreement was made between the Jerusalem Municipality, the Ministry of Finance and the Israel Land Authority. The signing ceremony was attended by Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Finance Minister Moshe Kahlon, Jerusalem Mayor Moshe Lion, and the Construction and Housing Minister Yifat Shasha-Biton, among others. According to the agreements, 8,000 of the newly-built apartments will be in the framework of urban renewal, with 3 million square meters of office space and a NIS 1.4 billion investment in infrastructure in old and new Jerusalem neighborhoods. “Jews built in Jerusalem 3,000 years ago and Jews are building in Jerusalem today,” said Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu at the agreement-signing ceremony. “Jerusalem is not a settlement, Jerusalem is the capital of Israel forever, 3,000 years is a part of eternity.” Mayor of Jerusalem Moshe Lion spoke at the event, saying, “There are governments that want to divide Jerusalem and there are governments that are divided over Jerusalem. This is a historic moment for Jerusalem and I am proud to be the one leading it.” “We invest billions every year in Jerusalem,” said Finance Minister Moshe Kahlon. “And this roof agreement speaks of an additional 1.5 billion... This is a holiday for Jerusalem, for the State of Israel, and there is nothing more symbolic and worthy than this agreement being signed on the very day of Menachem Begin’s passing.” (JPOST 11 March 2019)

- The state is pushing the High Court of Justice to overturn its long-standing legal understanding that illegal settler homes on private Palestinian property cannot be retroactively authorized. On Sunday night, it asked the court to apply the Israeli Market Regulation Law to the West Bank. Such a step would allow illegal settler homes to be authorized if they were built in a “good faith” situation where it was not known that the structures were on private Palestinian property. The state made its request in response to a 2011 petition by three Palestinian land owners against the Mitzpe Kramim outpost, which is located just outside of the Kochav Hashahar settlement in the Binyamin region of the West Bank. In 2013, while the High Court case was ongoing, the Mitzpe Kramim families turned to the Jerusalem Magistrates Court on the matter. In a historic ruling last August, the Magistrates Court sided with the settlers. The Magistrates Court ruled that the market regulation applied. It said the outpost could be retroactively legalized even though most of its more than 20 structures are built on private Palestinian property registered to individual Palestinian land owners. In the last several decades, the High Court has ruled in favor of Palestinians in such cases and ordered the removal of the outposts. In the aftermath of the Jerusalem Magistrates ruling, the High Court has moved forward with the initial 2011 case. The state explained to the court that Kochav HaShahar had been created on land for which the IDF had issued a number of seizure orders and had previously declared to be a closed firing zone. In 1982, the Civil Administration issued a master plan for Kochav Hashahar that was expanded in 1995. A short time after the creation of Mitzpe Kramim in 1999, the IDF relocated the outpost to an agricultural area within the master plan. But it did not authorize the community, which was developed with the help of the World Zionist Organization’s settlement division. In its statement to the High Court, the state explained that the community had every reason to believe that they were on state land and not private Palestinian property. It argued that the 1979 Elon Moreh ruling which forbade the construction of a new settlement on land that had been seized from Palestinians was not absolute principle and did not necessarily need to be applied here. It is still possible, the state argued, to apply the Market Regulation law to such instances. The relevant issue here, the state said, is not whether Palestinians originally owned the property but whether the settlers believe that the property in question was state land and thus could be authorized for their use. The state’s response is part of a push by the Justice Ministry to revolutionize the country’s legal understanding of how to handle illegal Jewish building on private Palestinian property. Two years ago, the Knesset passed the Settlement Regulation Law, which calls for the retroactive legalization of some 4,000 settler housing units, mostly in existing settlements. The High Court is adducting the legality of the law. But in the interim, the state has pushed forward with new targeted legal understandings, such as the Market Regulation, which it hopes will address the boarder issue of unauthorized settler homes in a way that is more legally palatable to the court. On Sunday, the left-wing group Peace Now petitioned the High Court of Justice to be a party to the proceedings, in which it would be viewed as a “friend of the court” so that it could provide expert background testimony on the issue. As part of the petition it provided the court, Peace Now provided a list of all the outpost and settlements with illegal construction on private Palestinian land as well as data on another 3,000 units legally built on private Palestinian land in the early part of the settlement movement with the help of military land seizures orders. In a statement to the media, it said that the court ruling would “likely serve as a precedent for the massive land grabs that the state has carried out over the years in the settlements.” It argued that the Market Regulation was not applicable in Mitzpe Kramim or in other situations because it was a one-sided discriminatory remedy in support of Jews and against Palestinians. “Only one side is consistently discriminated against, as evidenced in the data according to which 99.76% of the allocated state land in the West Bank was given to the Israeli population, while less than a quarter of a percent was allocated to Palestinians since 1967,” Peace Now said. - Israeli police army banned a Mother’s Day ceremony, organized by the Jerusalem Girls Association, from taking place in the central occupied West Bank city of Jerusalem. The Israeli Occupation Army (IOA) stormed Institut Francais de Jerusalem, where the ceremony was set to take place, and forced individuals present in the building to evacuate, under the pretext that it was sponsored by the Palestinian Authority (PA). - The UN Human Rights Council adopted a resolution on accountability brought by Pakistan on behalf of the Organization of the Islamic Conference (OIC). The vote had 23 states voting in favor, 8 against and with 15 abstentions, condemning Israel’s “apparent intentional use of unlawful lethal and other excessive force” against civilian protesters in Gaza. The vote follows a report by the United Nations Independent Commission of Inquiry to investigate the violations committed in the oPt, on their findings and results during the period from 30 March to 31 December 2018. The Commission concluded reasonable grounds to believe that the Israeli occupation Army (IOA) committed serious violations during the Great March of Return protests that may constitute war crimes or crimes against humanity.
