Home Demolition & Demolition threats

- The Israeli Magistrate Court ruled to evict a Palestinian Jerusalemite family from its home in the East Jerusalem neighborhood of Wadi Hilweh in Silwan for the benefit of settlers. The court ruling came in favor of the settler organizations of Ateret Cohanim and Elad, which filed a lawsuit demanding that the house be evicted under the pretext that it was absentee property. Ateret Cohanim and Elad organizations are settler groups that aim to create a Jewish majority in East Jerusalem at the expense of Palestinians. (Wafa 23 September 2019)

Expansion of settlements

- Israel constructed six new settlement units, on Palestinian lands, in Hebron, southern West Bank during the period 2017-2019. Israeli settlers established the units just a few hundred meters away from the main settlements. The units were constructed at the border of the western, southern and eastern provinces, citing the towns of Dura, Bane Na'eem, Yatta, Assamou', Athaherya and Sa'eer. The settlers began establishing these units by bringing in closed trucks hiding resident settler families inside. Despite its small size, the settlement's existence aims to seize wider areas of land. Those who reside in these units tend herds of livestock, grazing them on Palestinian lands and preventing shepherds from accessing large areas of land located around the outpost. The settlers cultivate area around the outpost, and that Israeli occupation forces provide protection for such outposts. (IMEMC, LRC 23 September 2019)
