Home Demolition & Demolition threats

- Caught in the middle of an enclave of Israeli settlers, the Sumrin family in the East Jerusalem neighborhood of Silwan is living the constant nightmare of eviction from the home it has lived in all its life. For 28 years, the family has spared no legal effort to prevent its eviction from its home in order to turn it over to the settlers. But the family today is facing imminent eviction after the Israeli Magistrate Court in Jerusalem ruled on September 23 that it has 90 days to evacuate the house on the pretext that the house is considered "absentee property". The house (owned by Ahmad Sumrin, 36) is built on a plot of land 800 square meters in area and is located in the middle of the so-called "City of David" enclave in Wadi Hilweh area of Silwan where the settlers are concentrated. The Sumrin house is surrounded by settlers, separated only by barbed wire and surveillance cameras. The Sumrin family home has a total area of 350 square meters and consists of four apartments housing 15 people, all of whom are now under the threat of eviction and displacement. The court ordered the family to pay 50,000 Israeli shekels (app. $14,000) in rent for the last three years to be paid for the custodian of absentee property under the pretext the house was owned by the custodian. The family was originally told to pay two million shekels ($600,000). (Wafa 28 October 2019)
