Expansion of settlements

- The skyline of Jerusalem's ancient Old City is set to be altered dramatically by a "cable car" the would blight the historic panorama and strengthen Jewish settlement in Palestinian neighbourhoods. Israel's housing cabinet, a governmental body, approved the cable car plan, despite objections that the transitional government currently in place, after the September elections, cannot green light such a project. Running from the Old City's Dung Gate to West Jerusalem, the Israeli government says the cable car would help ease traffic in the city and could transport 3,000 passengers an hour, at peak times. In January, various Israeli bodies earmarked 200,000,000 Israeli shekels ($54,400,000), to see the project completed. (HAARETZ , IMEMC 7 November 2019)
