- At least 153 Palestinians were wounded, including six in critical state, three journalists, and three paramedics, during the Israeli occupation forces (IOF) raid and extensive attacks on thousands of worshipers at al-Aqsa Mosque and its yards in occupied East Jerusalem. IOF launched a mass-arrest campaign after its breach into the holy mosque, at least 400 worshippers were arrested. As al-Aqsa Mosque's gates were opened and thousands of worshipers arrived for al-Fajir (dawn) prayers, the atmosphere was extremely tense due to the heavy IOF presence in the area, and on the rooftops near al-Silsila and al-Magharba gates. Thousands of worshippers gathered and prayed; after al-Fajir prayer, young men prepared wooden roadblocks around the al-Qibli prayer hall in anticipation of a possible IOF raid. They fired firecrackers towards al-Magharba gate where IOF stationed. Immediately, IOF raided the entire Mosque with hundreds of troops; the soldiers started shooting live bullets, tear gas canisters and stun grenades aggressively and randomly. As a result, dozens of worshippers and gathered civilians were wounded. All the while, clashes erupted between young Palestinian men and the IOF who continued to fire rubber-bullets, sounds bombs, and tear gas canisters; the latter also assaulted the worshippers all over the holy Mosque's grounds and shut all pathways leading to the holy site, banning medical crews entry, and hindering ambulances' access to Bab al-Asbat area to transport the wounded to hospitals. This is a precedent for IOF attacks on Palestinian worshippers. The attacks and raid lasted for hours. At approximately 10:00, IOF took hundreds of hand-cuffed arrestees through al-Magharibah gate, searched, and inspected them near the Western Wall.
