- Israeli soldiers detonated, Saturday dawn, the home of a Palestinian detainee in the Silat al-Harithiya town, west of Jenin, in the northern part of the occupied West Bank. Media sources said dozens of soldiers invaded the town, stormed the home of Omar Ahmad Jaradat, and wired its interior walls before detonating the property. The sources added that the invasion was conducted by more than a hundred military vehicles, including Israeli Combat Engineering Corps members. The invasion led to protests in the town before the soldiers shot three young men with live fire, causing moderate-but-stable wounds. The soldiers also assaulted and injured a young man, Mohammad Nasser Abu Salah, while standing in front of his home before abducting him. Ahmad Yassin Jaradat, the father of three detainees, Montaser, Gheith, Omar, and Ahmad's wife, who were all abducted in December, said the soldiers invaded the home

- approximately at 2:20 after midnight deploying sharpshooters on its rooftops. He added that the soldiers also invaded more than 100 homes in the town and deployed sharpshooters on their rooftops. They surrounded Omar Ahmed Mohammed Yasin Jaradat's house on the outskirts of the village and forced its residents to leave along with 10 other families living in nearby houses. As a result, civilians gathered in the area where IOF deployed and threw stones at the latter amidst clashes where IOF fired rubber-coated and live bullets, tear gas canisters, and stun grenades at the protestors. As a result, several persons suffocated due to tear gas inhalation and were treated in the field. IOF also arrested Mohammed Naser Abu-Ahmed Salah (25) from the village.
