- The director of land registration at the Justice Ministry decided to renew the registration of land in East Jerusalem. This would seem to be a positive step that will greatly help residents there. However, the manner in which this is being done raises suspicions that it is not their benefit which is of paramount interest for decision makers, but the interests of settler groups, which find a responsive ear in the ministry headed by Ayelet Shaked. Contrary to the recommendations of the Jerusalem Institute, the ministry is not cooperating with the Palestinian public. Worse, the ministry is refraining from announcing that registration will not serve as a means for the state to take over land through the custodian of absentee property, who is empowered to expropriate the property of anyone who is currently living in an enemy country, or who lived in one in the past. Thus, for example, if a father leaves a house to three brothers, two of whom are in Jordan (an enemy until 1994), the custodian can take possession of two thirds of the house. The thing is that nearly every family in East Jerusalem has a relative in Jordan. The concern is that the state will exploit the opportunity and take over such houses and plots which, judging by past experience, will immediately be transferred to settler groups. The state has rightfully earned the suspicions of the Palestinian residents of Jerusalem. The process of land registration could be a positive one that will empower these residents and improve the quality of their lives. It could also be a destructive move that will continue to fragment Palestinian areas in Jerusalem through the taking over of buildings by settlers, and through increased violence, destroying any hope for a political settlement in the city. The government should quickly issue clarifications regarding this process and declare that areas in East Jerusalem are intended for its residents. (Haaretz 10 April 2018)

- Israel denied entry of Ghanaian Member of Parliament Ras Mubarak to attend a conference planned in Ramallah. Mubarak, from the NDC's Kumbungu party, was invited by the Palestinian Authority to give a speech at an Islamic conference in Ramallah planned to open on Wednesday. Israeli authorities had issued a permit for him to enter the occupied Palestinian territories through the Allenby border crossing with Jordan. However, when Mubarak arrived at the border, Israeli authorities, which controls entry into the occupied territories, did not allow him. (Wafa 11 April 2018)
- Settlers praying in the middle of a road serving about a dozen Palestinian villages, along with prolonged security checks by soldiers, are for all intents and purposes blocking the road for thousands of Palestinians living west of Ramallah. Road 450 connects the villages of Bitilu, Deir Ammar, Jamala, Ras Karkar, Jania and others to communities northwest of Ramallah and to the northern West Bank. After a Palestinian man from Kaubar murdered three members of the Salomon family in their home in the settlement of Halamish in July, the army closed the road to local Palestinian traffic, which was redirected to a path leading from the road to the village of Deir Nizam. This restriction forced Palestinians to make a large detour to reach their destinations. The order was extended a few times until December 24, but as the result of legal measures taken by local residents through human-rights lawyer Neta Amar Schiff, the closure order was not extended after that, and since then this part of the road is also officially open to Palestinians. However, right after the Salomon murders, residents of Halamish built an outpost on the east side of the road and declared it a new neighborhood of the settlement. At the edge of the road, just south of Halamish, a sign was put up in Arabic reading: “The area where you are now is under the control of the Jews. Entry by Arabs to this area is completely prohibited, danger of death!” The sign, which was not put up by Israel’s Civil Administration, is often taken Israeli settlers slashed tires of four Palestinian-owned vehicles and spray-painted anti-Arab slogans in the village of Jaloud, south of the northern West Bank city of Nablus. The settlers vandalized the cars and wrote hate slogans on walls of homes in the eastern part of the village, an area where two illegal Jewish outposts were built. (Wafa 25 April 2018)

- down but soon replaced. In recent months, an army unit stationed at two military roadblocks on the road — one next to the outpost and the other a few hundred meters south of it — has conducted prolonged inspections of Palestinians and their vehicles at the roadblocks. According to testimony given to Amar Schiff, the soldiers do not make do with checking identification and opening the trunk or the hood of the cars, but make the passengers turn off the engine and get out of the vehicle. Sometimes they stop people from talking on their cellphones. According to reports, sometimes a car will be allowed through the first checkpoint but not the second one. Even before these reports reached Amar Schiff, on a number of occasions students taking the bus to Bir Zeit University were ordered off the bus. Soldiers frisked male students and searched the bags of female students. As a result, students began asking the drivers to take the detour, to avoid the humiliation of the prolonged inspections and the body searches. Individuals who said they tried arguing with the soldiers reported being subjected to even longer delays or being turned back at the first checkpoint. Sometimes when Israeli cars go through the checkpoint, soldiers will order Palestinians to wait on the shoulder of the road. Palestinians who gave statements to Amar Schiff on their experiences declined to give their names, out of fear of retaliation by soldiers. A few reported that they asked the soldiers why they were treating them this way, and said the soldiers told them outright it was so that Palestinians would take the detour (through Deir Nizam). In addition, a few months ago, settlers began praying on Saturday morning in the middle of the road between the outpost and the settlement. On Passover the prayers were also held in the interim days of the weeklong holiday, thus blocking the road to Palestinians for several hours for each day. Although the Israel Defense Forces Spokesman's Office told Haaretz that the prayers were not authorized by the army, soldiers were present to guard the worshippers. Thus during these hours the road was blocked completely to Palestinian traffic. (On Friday the worshippers demanded that the Haaretz photographer not take pictures because of the holiday.) Haaretz asked the IDF spokesman if this did not constitute a breach of the order of the general of command barring the extension of the travel restriction to Palestinians on this road. In a response, the army said it endeavors to maintain public order and security in the Halamish area and the road near the settlement. "This includes conducting inspections on the road from time to time, while attempting to minimize harm to the travelers' routine. Claims of extreme behavior during the inspections are not known, and they will be checked if details are provided." The statement said that prayers held on the road described by Haaretz in its query had not been authorized by the army, adding, "The security forces are working to maintain order on the road and disperse gatherings that disrupt traffic." The closure of a few hundred meters of road 450 to Palestinians will enable it to become an "interior" road between Halamish and the outpost built to its east, which is constantly expanding. The eastern part of road 450 is already blocked; Palestinians have not been allowed to use it since the beginning of the second intifada, in October 2000; it has become an interior road for the settlements of Talmon, Dolev and Nahliel. The construction was resumed at 5GMT on "non-conflict" border zones near Kfarkila-Oudaisah highway in Lebanon's southern town of Marjayoun. The separation wall is six-metre high and 120-centimetre wide and the Israeli occupation used heavy equipment to construct it. with an older wall which was built a couple of years ago at Fatema Gate on the Lebanese-Israeli borders. (PNN 12 April 2018)

- A tunnel being considered for the Jerusalem light rail's third line is expected to triple the cost of the project, damage two local parks and delay the completion of the project by some three years. The proposed tunnel would be in the city's German Colony neighborhood, where over the past year residents and business owners have been waging a public campaign against laying the train tracks in the center of the historic Emek Refaim Road crossing it. The tunnel is being considered following the residents' objections, which have prevented this part of the line from being approved. Jerusalem's District Planning Committee favors the tunnel, which submitted documents show will cost half a billion shekels more than the original plan, and will cause damage to Liberty Bell Park and Train Track Park. The committee is due to decide on the light rail track route in a month. On Monday the committee discussed various alternatives for the train line, presented by the Jerusalem Transportation Master Plan Team, a part-state, part-municipal body in charge of managing the capital's future transportation system. The original plan has the light rail running along Emek Refaim Road while cars travel alongside it. This requires trains from both directions to alternate using one set of rails in a section of the road, with those coming from the opposite direction having to wait their turn. Another alternative has the trains traveling on two sets of rails on Emek Refaim Road, but closes the street to private vehicles altogether. Architect Avi Lindenbaum, a member of the Blue Line (Jerusalem's third light rail line) planning team, believes the latter is less feasible. "In principle this improves the road's look, but completely prevents private cars from traveling on it, as well as people who want to visit the street on Friday and see a movie in Lev Smadar cinema," he says. Residents of the German Colony and nearby streets are vehemently opposed to the Blue Line and maintain that it will destroy the neighborhood's historic character, businesses and picturesque atmosphere. Residents of nearby neighborhoods, however, support the original proposal, with a single track in Emek Refaim. They claim the first group's campaign isn't taking into consideration the light rail's contribution to developing the entire area. Another alternative based on old plans consists of diverting the light rail line to Hebron Road and from there through the Talpiot industrial area to Oranim junction and the Katamonim neighborhood. This option would be detrimental to residents of Katamonim, who will have to travel seven more minutes in each direction. Due to the topographical layout, extensive earth works would also be required, says Lindenbaum. The planners thoroughly examined two other alternatives that are seen as more doable. One has the light rail passing through Train Track Park, where the historic railway line that the park is named after used to be. This is a relatively fast, simple and easy alternative compared to the others. However, it would mean that the park, which has become a great urban success in the last decade, would be torn down. The other alternative has the train passing through a 1,650-meter tunnel under Train Track Park, with stations on either side of it. This is the option the opponents of the train in Emek Refaim road are pushing for. A presentation obtained by Haaretz shows that this plan will lead to engineering and planning problems as well as damaging both Liberty Bell Park and Train Track Park, which is bound to raise residents' objections. For example, the train's entrance to the underground tunnel requires a 230-meter open canal, which would shorten Liberty Bell Park and lead to the destruction of about two dunams of it. On the other side of the tunnel, a 130-meter-long portal would shorten Train Track Park. The plan would rezone the extensive gardening grounds and require many ancient olive trees in Liberty Bell park and dozens of eucalyptus trees and old plane trees in Train Track Park to be chopped down. According to the presentation, the tunnel option would cost an estimated 800 million shekels – compared to 254 million shekels for the Emek Refaim Road option and 175 million shekels for the Train Track Park option. The district committee believes the actual costs will be higher. Lindenbaum says the tunnel option could delay the works by two or three years. On top of the damage to the parks, the city's First Station site would have to be closed down. Asked why the tunnel cannot be extended so that it wouldn't harm the park, Lindenbaum says that "Oranim junction is supposed to be a meeting of the Blue, Green and Purple lines and extending the tunnel farther would hinder the train's future operations." Lawyer Itamar Shahr, one of the supporters of laying the light rail on Emek Refaim Road, set up a website for fellow supporters' posts. The site features a petition, which 950 people supporters have already signed. Shahr says the discussion clearly shows that the Emek Refaim alternative is the only valid one: "It's not clear why hundreds of millions of shekels have to be wasted, when the only benefit is continuing to enable private cars to travel on Emek Refaim Road." "In contrast, the rail track in Emek Refaim will clearly upgrade the street and the neighborhood. The main downside is the construction period," he says. Shahr criticizes the committee's foot-dragging. "The committee has all the backing to choose the Emek Refaim alternative," he says. "I don't know any planners, apart from those hired by the objectors, who don't think the Emek Refaim alternative is the best. And yet the committee keeps prolonging the process with all kinds of unclear procedural arguments that don't pertain to planning." The opponents to the Emek Refaim line say the presentation intended to persuade the committee to vote for it, because that's the plan the Jerusalem Transportation Master Plan team supports. "The way this document was drafted is mistaken and misleading," says Prof. Ariel Hirschfeld, one of the protest's leaders, adding that the northern portal shown in the plan was copied from a document prepared by the plan's opponents together with tunnel experts, and it isn't problematic and will hardly damage Libert Bell Park. The southern portal, on the other hand, was set up to damage Train Track Park, although it doesn't have to, says Hirschfeld: "The portal can be moved, or other simple engineering solutions can be used so that it isn't necessary to destroy part of the park." He also said that ultimately, having the train pass through Emek Refaim Road will cause more damage to Train Track Park than the tunnel option because traffic will be diverted to the park during the years of construction. "The problem isn't Emek Refaim Road, but the side streets where all the traffic will go. It will bury everything that is the German Colony," he says. "This is the only historic neighborhood left in Jerusalem." He adds that the interests of the residents there and those in nearby neighborhoods are the same: "They want mass transportation as well as to protect Train Track Park and that's exactly what we want. The only thing that will accomplish that is a tunnel under Harakevet Road." (Haaretz 13 April 2018)

- The Israel Central Bureau of Statistics released population data ahead of Israel's 70th Independence Day saying that 8,842,000 people live in Israel and in the settlements in the West Bank. According to the data, 6,589,000 (74.5%) are Jews, 1,849,000 (20.9%) are Arabs and 404,000 (4.6%) non-Arab Christians, a number that includes those of other religions or not belonging to any religious denomination. Additionally, there are 169,000 people in Israel who are neither citizens nor permanent residents. The data show that since last day's Independence Day, the number of those living in Israel and in Israeli settlements grew by 163,000. Over the last year, 177,000 kids were born and 41,000 people died. Meanwhile, some 28,000 new immigrants arrived to Israel, adding up to the figure of 3.2 million who arrived to since Israel was founded in 1948. In line with the trend of the past decade, Israel's overall population continued to grow by around 1.9 percent over the last year. In 1948 there were 806,000 people living in Israel, a figure which is up to 8,842,000 today. When Israel turns 100, in 2048, the population is expected to reach 15.2 million. - Israel demolished or seized a total of 97 Palestinian structures in the first quarter of 2018, a 50 percent rise when compared to the equivalent quarter in 2017 and 20 percent rise compared to the equivalent quarter in 2016, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs (OCHA) to the occupied Palestinian territories said on Tuesday. It said that in spite of the relatively low level of destruction of Palestinian property observed in the first two months of 2018 and a further decreased in March with a total of 28 structures demolished/seized/sealed compared to a monthly average of 35 structures in 2017, the total number of structures demolished/seized during the first quarter of 2018 reached 97, representing around 50 and 20 per cent of the structures demolished/seized in the equivalent quarters of 2017 and 2016, respectively. Almost 30 per cent of the structures targeted in the first quarter of the year were residential, and the rest livelihood-related structures or community infrastructure. Of note, nearly a third of the affected structures during this period have been seized, rather than demolished, up from only 10 per cent during 2017. Twenty-three of this month's structures were demolished, seized or (in one case) sealed off due to the lack of building permits in Area C and East Jerusalem, and an additional structure, in Area A, was sealed off on punitive grounds. Seventeen of the structures targeted (about 70 per cent) were in East Jerusalem, where, despite the overall decline, demolitions remain at the same high level as in 2017 and 2016. Of them, seven were residences, including three that were demolished or sealed by their Palestinian owners to avoid high fines. The largest incident took place in the community of Al Wata, near the Gilo checkpoint, where the Israeli authorities demolished two homes and five commercial and livelihood structures, displacing 13 people. In Area C, said OCHA, the Israeli authorities demolished six structures in five separate incidents, the lowest number of Palestinian structures demolished in Area C since June 2017. In one incident in the herding community of Susiya, in Hebron, the Israeli authorities seized a residential tent displacing one family. Part of the community is at risk of forcible transfer, with an upcoming hearing at the Israeli Supreme Court to be held in May. None of the structures was donor-funded assistance, although four EU-funded structures in a community in the Jordan Valley received a stop-work order. Overall, during the first quarter of 2018, 14 donor-funded structures have been demolished/seized, representing an 82-90 per cent decline compared to the same quarters in 2017 (78 structures) and 2016 (136 structures). Of concern, in late March, the Israeli authorities requested the Israeli Supreme Court to dismiss a petition filed by the Al Muntar Bedouin community (Ramallah), against the demolition of its only school, and to remove an interim court order preventing the demolition. A decision on the case is pending. The school, made of structures and equipment funded by the EU, began to operate in mid-2017 serving children between 1st and 6th grades. This is one of the 46 Palestinian Bedouin communities in the central West Bank at risk of forcible transfer due to the coercive environment exerted on them, said OCHA report. - The US State Department has dropped, from its annual human rights report released on Friday, the term “Occupied Territories” when making reference to the West Bank, East Jerusalem and Gaza. - Facts on the ground showed that Israel's investment in the occupied West Bank is much more than the one inside the occupied 1948 borders. Within this context, the Israeli government allocated NIS 417,000,000 for developing settlements in the Dead Sea area, in order to attract more settlers, expand the settlements outside the Green Line and Judaize it. According to the above information, the budget is not allocated to save the Dead Sea drought, but to strengthen and support the settlement outside the Green Line, within the so-called "Regional Council Megillot north of the Dead Sea, which means expansion under the slogan of development of tourism and maintenance of road no. 90. In turn, Head of the Tamar Regional Council and a member of Kibbutz Ein Gedi, Dov Latinov, said the decision will serve as a lifeline to save the Dead Sea and to further develop the settlements there, as the sea is an irreplaceable national treasure," after the government decision. The Jordan Valley region is considered part of the Afro-Asian crater pit, one of the lowest in the world, located at a low of about 380 m below sea level. The Palestinian Jordan Valley stretches along the eastern side of the West Bank from Ein Gedi (the Dead Sea) southward to the so-called "Tal Makhkhoz" on the borders of Bisan northward inside the Green Line. And from the Jordan River in the east to the eastern slopes of the West Bank of the Jordan Valley in the west. This area accounts for 28.5% of the West Bank 2,400 sq km. Settlers' profits through investment in the northern Jordan Valley amount to $ 650,000,000. annually. At the same time, the attacks and violations of the "pay the price gangs" against the Palestinians and their properties escalated under the protection of the occupation government, and silent encouragement from the American administration during the past week. Those terrorist groups carried out several attacks, including attacking the eastern village of Luban, attacking citizens' property and assaulted farmers from the village of Madma during the plowing of their land and forced them to leave using tear gas bombs. Moreover, assaulted the villagers of Al-Tawana in Mafassar Yatta, threw rocks at them, attacking a bus at a school in Yatta, resulted in injuring 13-year-old Ahmed Abu Aram, as well as assaulting students in schools in the Salameh neighborhood in the Old City of Hebron, puncturing 45 vehicles in the village of Burqa east of Ramallah, and cutting down about 100 olive fruitful trees in the village of Burin south of Nablus and 15 others in the Urief village. For their part, settlers launched a campaign on the “Facebook” calling for the killing of Palestinians and slaughter and burn them, calling hospitals maternity sections to cut heads of the recently born babies recently, another said, “we must revenge for every Jew injured or killed. Within the context, the occupation attorney general decided to abandon the confessions of the perpetrators of the crime of burning the family of Duabsha, in the village of Duma, south of the city of Nablus, 2 years ago under the pretext that the confessions are illegal because they are obtained in an unusual ways. Moreover, the Israeli Kern Keimet Fund decided not to allow the setting up a memorial of its son Moh’d Abu Khudair, who was killed after he was burned alive in a crime committed by 3 settlers in July 2014, in a forest around Jerusalem. On the other hand, the 3rd annual report of the Palestinian Center for Israeli Studies (MADAR), on the “Register of racist and supportive laws for the occupation and settlement,” has been escalated and even accelerated by the Israeli right to enact legislation aimed at consecrating Israeli control of as much of the West Bank as possible. During the 3 years of the parliamentary mandate of the Knesset, 185 laws were passed, including 54 laws that were passed or entered into legislation. This clearly implies the involvement of the Knesset in imposing racist legislation aimed at restricting Palestinian citizens and controlling their land and property. Pal Legislation on the Judaization of Jerusalem and legislation on settlement expansion since the beginning of the Knesset’s 20 mandate, it has dealt with 43 laws for the direct and indirect annexation of the occupied West Bank or settlements. The most important laws that have finally been passed are the Land Grab and Land Privileges Law, the Law for the Consolidation of Jerusalem, the Israeli Higher Education Law on Settlements Institutes, the University in Ariel, and 2 other academic colleges. The National Bureau said the positions of US officials helped radicalizing the behavior of Israelis in general and settlers in particular, it pointed out that the new escalation in the attacks and violations of the terrorist “paying the price gangs” would not have continued seriously in the last few days and weeks. (PNN 24 April 2018)

- A large police force secured the uprooting of 80 old olive trees from lands of dozens of dunums of land in Sur Baher near the Armon Hanatziv neighborhood in East Jerusalem. The area was expropriated for public use in 1970, but only 35 years later it was planned as a residential neighborhood of 180 housing units. The Government decided to allocate the units for members of the security forces. In 1970, the Minister of Finance announced the expropriation of thousands of dunums in the area of Sur Baher and Jabal Mukaber, on which the Armon Hanatziv neighborhood (AKA East Talpiot) was later built. The area from which the olive trees were uprooted yesterday in the Ghazail area of the land of Sur Baher was also expropriated in 1970, but for years the state did not use it and the landowners continued to cultivate it and grow olive trees there. In 2005, construction plan No. 7977 was approved, which designated the land for a residential neighborhood of 180 housing units. On 20 May 2012, the government decided to allocate lands in Jerusalem for the members of the security forces, and in October 2012, the Israel Lands Authority announced that the new residential neighborhood near Sur Baher would be designated for members of the security forces. The Association for Civil Rights in Israel (ACRI) Appealed against this decision to the Supreme Court, but the Court approved the allocation to the security forces. In April 2014, the ILA filed an evacuation claim against the Palestinian landowners in the Jerusalem Magistrate's Court. The court ordered the landowners to vacate it, and after their appeal was denied, the ILA turned to the Execution Office, and yesterday the olive trees were uprooted according to the court's order. It is important to emphasize that the decision to allocate the land to the security forces rather than the general public is the government's way of discriminating against Palestinians without explicitly stating this. In the security forces there is hardly a Palestinian resident of Jerusalem so that the project is actually intended for Israelis only. (PEACENOW, HAARETZ 24 April 2018)

- Dozens of Israeli soldiers, accompanied by armored military bulldozers, invaded Palestinian agricultural lands and orchards in Bardala village, in the West Bank's Northern Plains, before uprooting hundreds of trees, fruits and vegetable plants. Resident Hasan Sawafta received a military order for uprooting his trees and plants, four years ago, under the pretext that his lands are "state-owned" in the occupied West Bank. The army informed him his lands are "designated for military usage," therefore, are off-limits to the Palestinians. He files appeals against the destruction of his land, but were all denied. The lands were planted with 100 trees, in addition to ten Dunams planted with cucumbers, and seven Dunams planted with corn. The destruction was started after ten army jeeps, large vehicles and bulldozers invaded the area. (IMEMC 25 April 2018)

The Jerusalem District Court sentenced Israeli border policeman Ben Deri to nine months in prison after being convicted of negligent homicide after killing Nadim Nuwara in Ramallah four years ago. Nuwara and another Palestinian teenager, Mohammad Abu Daher, 17, were deliberately shot dead during a protest commemorating the anniversary of the Nakba on May 15, 2014 in Beitunia town near Ramallah. Under a plea deal, Deri was fined 50,000 shekels (approximately $14,000) in compensation for Nuwara's death and would only serve seven months in prison as the sentence includes time served. - Forty Palestinians have been killed and 5,511 were wounded in the mass protests along the border fence between the Gaza Strip and Israel since March 30, the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs reported on Tuesday. The protests have been held every Friday since then. The information on the casualties is broken down by date, nature of the injury, gender and age, as well as where the person was treated. Of the injured, 2,596 people were hospitalized in government hospitals, 773 in nongovernment hospitals and the rest were treated in the field. Of those in government hospitals, 1,499 were hit by live ammunition, 107 by sponge-tipped bullets, 408 suffered gas inhalation and 582 suffered other injuries; 2,142 were adults and 454 were minors. "Gaza's health sector is struggling to cope with the mass influx of casualties, due to years of blockade, internal divide and a chronic energy crisis, which have left essential services in Gaza barely able to function,” stated the report. The information is based on figures from the Palestinian Health Ministry in Gaza and OCHA says the data is a preliminary snapshot only and further information is pending. On Wednesday, the Palestinian Health Ministry in Gaza reported the death of Ahmed Abu Hassin, a press photographer who was shot two weeks ago during the protests. The protests will continue even after May 15, the day the Palestinians mark the Nakba (Catastrophe) – the founding of Israel – said Ismail Haniyeh, the head of the Hamas political bureau, on Wednesday. “The Palestinian people will demonstrate throughout Ramadan to deal with the many challenges facing us, and first of all the peace plan promoted by U.S. President Donald Trump, called the ‘Deal of the Century,’” said Haniyeh.
